REPORTORIAL NOTES.

WHAT THE PEOPLE SAY.

Our reporter, in making his customary rounds in the upper part of the city, found news very scarce. Not even Capt. Epps, or Sergeant Thomas, or Sergeant Parater, or Sergeant Cousins, all of whom are generally newsy, could give an item, and he was about to return to the office without a single scratch in his note book, when the thought occurred to him that Justice Thomas M. Saunders might tell him something about things in the West End or on Brook avenue. Mr. Saunders, as everybody knows, is the popular druggist at the corner of Brook avenue and Marshall street, opposite the Third police station. Since his store was remodelled it is one of the most attactive drug establishments in Richmond. Our reporter stepped into the store and was met by the affable proprietor with a cordial shake of the hand. "By the way, Mr. Saunders," remarked the writer, "you used to suffer a good deal with the rheumatism; what has become of it? You don't seem to be afflicted now. You must have got hold of St. Jacob's Oil—the Great German Remedy."

"That's just it," replied Mr. Saunders. "I have been using St. Jacob's Oil, and have found great relief from it."

"Then you believe in St. Jacob?"

"Yes, sir; I believe it is a first class oil."

Mr. Saunders said he had sold a great deal of it to his customers, and that accounts of wonderful cures have been related to him. The clerk behind Mr. Saunders' counter spoke up and told of a remarkable case. A gentleman who had suffered long with rheumatism and had been deprived of the use of his arm thereby, applied St. Jacob's Oil and now his arm is as strong and active as it ever was.

As our reporter had got to thinking about St. Jacob's Oil, he came to the conclusion that it would not be a bad idea to "get up" a few facts about the good that this famous remedy was doing in this community. So he bade adieu to Justice Saunders and sallied forth.

Col. C. P. Barksdale, President of the Tobacco Exchange and a member of the Board of Aldermen, informed the writer that he had tried St. Jacob's Oil for an acute pain in his shoulder and had been greatly benefitted. He had the Oil applied at night while he was suffering and the next morning he was well.

At the American hotel the interviewer met Mr. H. E. Crocker a gentleman from the State, who had been sojourning here about a month. He said in reply to questions about St. Jacob's Oil: "I suffered with paralysis of the leg; could scarcely walk. I used two bottles in one night and was cured. It is the best remedy I have ever tried, and I have tried them all."

Edward Blakey at 207 Leigh street, said, "Having suffered with intense pain about the eyes and head, I procured a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil. I applied the same according to directions and found relief at once. I cheerfully recommend the Oil."

The reporter called on Mr. John R. McPhail, the well known druggist at the corner of Eighteenth and Main, and asked what he thought of the Oil. "Well, I sell a good deal of it. I know of a remarkable cure it has made. A lady acquaintance of mine on the hill had been suffering many years from severe rheumatism and swelling of the hands and feet. She heard of St. Jacob's Oil and bought a bottle. She used it and the result was highly beneficial.

J. H. Childrey, the popular druggist at 1722 Main street, remarked to the writer: "Yes, sir; it is a success. Men, women and children are running after it."

Mr. James A. Gentry, Ex-Mayor of Manchester, met the reporter and told him how he had been relieved by St. Jacob's Oil. He had suffered with acute rheumatism, but by rubbing with the Oil had been cured.

Mr. B. P. Owen, city editor of the Whig, said he had just been cured of severe pains by an application of the Oil.

Timothy Sullivan, 1107 North Seventeenth street, testified as follows: "My wife had suffered with terrible pains in her side and could find no relief until I procured a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil. After one or two applications of the Oil I can truly say she was very much relieved."

L. E. Franck, 28 North Ninth street, said: "I had a very severe attack of rheumatism in my knee-joint and hip. I suffered such pain that it was impossible for me to put my foot to the ground. I procured a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil and used the same according to directions. I found great relief. In half an hour after using the pain had left my knee-joint entirely, and this morning I am up and about my store attending to business."

In an interview with Mr. Ed. Taylor, of the firm of R. W. Powers & Co., wholesale druggists, that gentleman said: "Oh, St. Jacobs Oil is a tremendous success, we sell more of it than anything else of the kind on the market."

Mr. B. M. J. Paynter, the well-known manager of the Western Union, has used St. Jacobs Oil for severe rheuatism, and testifies strongly to its beneficial results.

AN American and Irishman were discussing politics; said the American, as a clinching argument: "My ancestors fought for this country." To which the Irishman replied: "Faix, so did mine." "So did yours?" queried the American. "How can that be and you born in Ireland?" "My grandfather was a soldier in the British army, and he was here in America fighting. Didn't he fight for the country?"

FOR dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility, in their various forms; also as a preventative against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are suffering from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

TONY PASTOR IN TROUBLE.

Tony Pastor, of New York, who is now with his inimitable variety combination making a tour of the Union, is recognized as the leading character vocalist and variety performer of the United States. The writer of this article met Mr. Pastor recently, and found him as genial in private as he is amusing before the public. During our conversation I inquired as to his physical health, and he replied that it was excellent. He had occasionally severe pains, either the result of rheumatic attacks or colds, but any complaints of that character never trouble him long, as he had found out a remedy for all such annoying affections. I asked what the remedy was and he replied, "ST. JACOBS OIL." Mr. Pastor said that he considered the Great German Remedy an excellent preparation for the cure or relief of rheumatism, and that it was the only thing used among professional people for that distressing complaint. He took bottles of it with him whenever he went traveling, and would not be without it, and knew that it was very popular with a number of members of his own company. The foregoing, from the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Eagle, recalls to our mind an item wherein the editor of the Cairo (Ill.) Evening Sun, in paying a tribute to the enterprise of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, and expressing his sorrow at the loss by fire which the latter paper sustained, says: "The whole office was knocked into ten thousand pieces—all except the ST. JACOBS OIL advertisement, which was mercifully preserved." The closing remarks in the above and the following incident are a true index of the unexampled popularity the Great German Remedy enjoys everywhere: At a St. Louis theatre recently whilst the play was in progress, one of the lady performers met with a painful mishap, which quite disabled her. The hero of the piece, equal to the emergency, called out to one of the ushers to "bring a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL quickly." The thundering applause throughout the entire house which promptly followed this happy suggestion was an unmistakable proof of the fact that the audience "had been there themselves," as the expression goes, and experienced the benefits of this wonderful article.

Mr. Charles A. Whitney, advertising agent of Park Garden, Providence, R. I., writes: "For three years I had inflammatory rheumatism in my right hip and knee. I employed many noted physicians, and tried numerous remedies for the ailment, but found nothing to help me until I used the Great German Remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL, which cured me at once. I am now entirely well."

PICKLED LIMES.

A Boarding-School Frolic.

I.—PLOTTING MISCHIEF.

Who likes pickled limes?" asked

, I do!" "And I!" "And I!" ted about a dozen of the other girls. All right! We'll each contribute a pennies, and have a regular feast of ed limes and stick-candy."

That's so!" cried No. 2. "Won't enjoy them, though! My mouth rs to think of it."

hese young girls were all pupils in a aristocratic boarding-school not y miles away, where everything was ducted on system, and the young s were expected to turn out perfect els of intellectual womanhood. Some but, alas! for human hopes, very y graduated with but one fixed , namely: that boarding-school was e in which to have fun, and to tor- t the teachers to the utmost of their ity.

iss Woodward was a fine principal a very discerning woman, but the would get the best of her occasion- in spite of her keen eyes and ears; just now, after a whole month of dness, they were positively pining mischief, and had ransacked their ns for something wicked enough to k the whole community.

he morning before, while their thy principal was taking her beauty- p, some one had climbed up to the nda, and just before her window placed a most ridiculous caricature her august self, adorned with her ious brown ringlets, and a set of h that were supposed to have been ofound secret. How they got out of top drawer on to that figure will al- s remain a mystery to Miss Wood- d. But there they were; so the poor was obliged to pull the object in, stifle her indignation as best she d, because 'twould never do to have story spread abroad.

he young Professor of Languages been tormented to such a degree , had it not been for an attachment the very ringleader of all the mis- f, he would certainly have thrown his situation for more peaceful nts; but, being hopelessly in love, ore it all, to the great disgust of the , who daily expected some explosion him. Nothing was said, and, as Woodward had kept quiet about figure, they were quite melancholy, felt that nothing but great dis- ence, in some form, would com- te for their disappointment.

ne of the rules of the school strictly oined the putting out of all the lights 9:30 o'clock, and the putting of one's quietly to bed; but here were these this afternoon planning for pickled s and a good time in the evening, r all the good people of the house uld be in their beds.

s was decided that, after tea, Nettie ler, the very essence of fun and the der in all the mischief, should feign ess and start for her room, but should l out the back gate and down into town for the goodies. So while the ers were in the dining hall, Nettie, ing been excused on "account of a ere sick headache," made her escape did all that was desired of her—and e. She bought all kinds of dainties town afforded, then stole in and t up stairs with her large bundle, t 10 o'clock, when they were sup- d to be sweetly sleeping, fourteen of fifty decorous young women in the ablishment were perched on Nettie's , sucking pickled limes and discuss- more mischief.

"If we could only do something to perate Prof. Sterns, I should be ghted," said Grace Darnley, who disliked the professor for something the same reason as the fox detested the grapes.

They all sat busily thinking for about a minute, nothing being heard but the smack of lips over limes and candy. Then, "Oh, girls, I have an idea!" from Grace.

All mouths suspended motion.

"You know Ma'am Woodward thinks the professor is perfection itself, and, although she is about twenty years older than he, thinks that those ringlets and her bewitching manner have surely captivated him. Well, we'll send her a touching love-letter, and sign his name; won't that be fun, though?"

The other girls were astonished at such a vigorous movement, because, notwithstanding all their mischief, they thoroughly respected the young man, and did not wish to disgrace themselves in his eyes. Nettie, although knowing nothing of his feelings for her, was quite tenderly disposed toward him, and did not care to see him intrapped, and perhaps led into marriage. They all demurred some time, but were finally overruled by Grace.

"He won't mind it a bit," said she; "and think how mad 'twill make the 'old 'un,' when she discovers that we are aware of her passion for him!"

That was sufficient; they all detested her—so agreed.

A week from that night was to occur a monthly social circle given in the school, when the young ladies of the town outside were invited, and also a few irreproachable young men, who afforded great amusement for the girls by their meek and lowly appearance. It was decided that in the letter a place and time of meeting should be appointed. Time—nine and one-half o'clock, social night; place—Miss Woodward's private parlor.

The pickled limes and candy having by this time all disappeared, the party broke up with a parting injunction from Grace to think up an awful letter for the old lady.

II.—EXECUTING MISCHIEF.

The next few days were busy ones. Every spare moment was occupied by the girls in writing and comparing love-letters; but finally one was composed which it was decided could not be improved upon. It spoke of the overwhelming passion the author had for Miss W., and his utter inability to keep it longer to himself. "Having fancied, from several slight advances, that she was not entirely indifferent to him, he had ventured to address these lines to her. He knew there was some difference in their ages, but if she would overlook that, he would make her a faithful, devoted husband. If she could return his love, would she meet him in her private parlor the next evening, while the others were making merry above stairs? And could he ask her to make no sign until that time, as, in case of a refusal, he would like to think of her as his own, for a while, at least."

Grace had been spending hours trying to imitate his handwriting, in which she succeeded to some degree; but, being a love-letter, the lady would scarcely think of the writing simply of the supposed writer.

One afternoon, two days before social night, while the principal was out taking her "constitutional," the letter was carried to her room and placed where she would surely see it; then the girls waited with some fear and trembling for the result.

At the tea-table, that night, Miss Woodward was late, and came in with a peculiar expression of triumph on her face that amused the girls, even in their anxiety.

That she had read the letter was evident, for occasionally she would glance down to the other table so happy, where Prof. Sterns sat unconsciously eating, that, had the poor fellow been really an anxious lover, it would have lightened his heart considerably. But he, being ignorant of the plot against his peace of mind, was serenely talking with one of the other teachers; so Miss Woodward restrained her raptures until the appointed meeting should take place.

That night the same fourteen conspirators gathered again in Nettie's room to talk over matters.

"Oh, dear," said pretty little Alice Grant, "I wish we'd never had anything to do with that old letter! I know something horrid will turn up."

"That's so!" said Nettie; "and I would not have Prof. Sterns know that I was in the scrape for the world!"

They all echoed the sentiment except Grace, and even she did not seem so desirous of mischief as formerly; but 'twas done, and they must await the consequences as best they could.

III.—THE CONSEQUENCES.

The next evening, while the young professor was arranging his toilet for the affair, a note was handed him by one of the servants requesting his presence in the principal's parlor at half-past nine. Supposing it to be some business connected with school duties, he thought little about the matter. Now this was unknown to any but Grace. She had decided to make the little plot more complicated.

"'Twill serve him right if he does get into a scrape," thought she. "Perhaps it will teach him to treat some of the younger girls with a little more politeness."

About 8 o'clock they all came to the long drawing rooms, looking as pretty as new-blown roses. The rooms were filled with young people, and of course they straightway proceeded to enjoy themselves.

Miss Woodward was arrayed in "spotless white," and looked the very ancient maiden she was, notwithstanding her attempts to appear extremely youthful.

Prof. Sterns was enjoying himself heartily, and never so much as looked her way. "But," thought she, "'tis because he is fearful lest the girls should joke him. But they'll hear it to-morrow, for I shall tell them myself. After so many years of waiting, I wish to be the first to spread the news of my engagement."

As the clock sounded the half hour after 9, Miss Woodward skipped youthfully out of the room down into her own parlor, and a few moments later Prof. Sterns also left the room, followed by many anxious eyes until out of sight. As he entered her room, the principal gave a little shriek of what was meant to be joy, and rushed into his arms.

"Miss Woodward?" exclaimed the astonished man, trying to shake her off. "Pray explain yourself! What has alarmed you?"

"O! Edward, this moment is too much for me! Can I believe my own eyes?" still clinging to him like grim death.

The professor could scarcely believe his senses, but, giving her a decided shove, sat her down on the sofa.

"Now, madam, please explain yourself! You wished to see me on business, and here I am! What is wanted me?"

"Why, Edward," very tenderly, "there is no need for such secrecy; no one is within hearing but ourselves, and you know, love, you wished an answer to your note. It is here; I have loved you from the moment I saw you, and am willing to be your wife. The sooner, the better;" and once more she made a rush for his coat-collar.

To say that the young fellow was astonished is but a feeble expression—he was simply dumbfounded. And the note! What could it all mean? But, having forcibly seated the too-loving woman again, he said:

"Let me see the letter!"

With a look of great consternation on her face, she produced it, and watched him closely as he read.

"Miss Woodward!" after reading slowly from beginning to end, "believe me, I never saw this before."

"What! You didn't write it?" shrieked the almost-frantic woman; "then who did? Who has dared to make such a fool of me? Who has dared do it, I say?"

Now if the professor guessed, he said nothing, but tried to calm the poor woman, for he pitied her grief and rage.

But 'twas in vain! In her raving, she dropped off her beautiful curls, and that was the "straw which broke the camel's back;" she fell to the floor in a swoon. The young man, thinking she would be better without him, took his leave, and sent one of the servants to her assistance; then went to his own apartments to think it over.

That Nettie Cutler was at the bottom of the mischief, he was certain, and he suffered some sharp pangs to think she cared so little for his feelings and those of her teacher as to do such a thing. After much meditation on the subject, the poor fellow took himself to bed with a heavy heart.

Miss Woodward was, with some difficulty, tucked away for the night, and her feelings were pitiable indeed. She meant to be kind to the girls, and to think they should do such an act (for by this time she had thought of some of her pupils as the authors) troubled her greatly. Then, how should she ever meet that fellow again? But, while thinking over these things, she gradually fell asleep and forgot all her woes.

The mischief-makers themselves were almost as uneasy as their victims. Not much was said among them, and they retired early; but none of them rested well, and Nettie cried herself to sleep.

The next morning, as Nettie was going down the corridor, who should she meet but the professor himself going up. She attempted to pass with a simple "Good-morning," but he stopped.

"Miss Cutler, I could scarcely believe that you would be guilty of such a deed as you performed at Miss Woodward's and my expense. I have lost respect for you!"

"Oh! Professor! we—we really didn't mean to do any harm!" sobbed Nettie; "and we thought you'd know 'twas all in fun!"

"Yes! It must be remarkably funny to hurt the feelings of your principal as you have done," he said, sternly, and passed on.

Nettie stood gazing after him with tearful eyes. "If we hadn't had those horrid old pickled limes to eat, we should never have thought of it. Oh! he will never look at me again! I wish I was dead and buried!"

But, bless you! he did; he couldn't help it. The girls went to their principal, confessed their crime, and were punished according to the deed; but they were not expelled, to their great relief; and Miss Woodward recovered from her grief and disappointment in time.

The professor, after making friends with Miss Nettie, and discovering that she really was not the leader for this time, found another professorship not far away, and resigned his to a much older man, who at last accounts was intending to make the principal and himself one.

After Nettie became Mrs. Sterns, she would often say, laughingly, that pickled limes were not good food for young women—they encouraged mischief.

HE WON THE BET.

A wag, who was anxious to test how much confidence a certain friend had in him, took a standard dollar, and, coating it with quicksilver, passed it at the other's store. In less than half an hour the dollar, whose peculiar appearance had aroused distrust, was brought back with:

"Here, Billy, you have given me a bogus dollar, and I came to get it redeemed."

"It isn't a bogus dollar at all; it's as good as any money ever coined in America," replied the wag. "Can't you believe me? No man has a right to call money counterfeit until he subjects it to a fire assay."

The other said that under ordinary circumstances he would believe his friend, but when it came to trying to palm off lead dollars on him for silver ones it was another matter, and offered to bet $10 that the dollar was bogus. The bet was accepted and the dollar turned over to an assayer who pronounced it standard silver 900 fine.

"Well," said the loser, "you set up the oysters and we'll go down to the store and get the money."

The winner, whose conscience begun to smite him, spent exactly $10 in champagne and oysters, and then walked down to the store. The loser handed him a $10 bill, which he shoved into his pocket only to find a few hours later that it was counterfeit. He went back to expostulate, but the loser insisted that it was genuine, and added significantly: "If you have any doubts as to the correctness of my statement you had better subject it to a fire assay."

The smart Aleck wandered off blaspheming, and is now trying to figure up how much he is ahead on his trick.

NEURALGIA AS A "WARNING."

One of the London medical journals declares that the great prevalence of neuralgia—or what commonly goes by that name—should be regarded as a warning indicative of a low condition of health, which must necessarily render its subjects peculiarly susceptible to the invasion of disease of an aggressive type. It is always essential that the vital forces should be vigorous, and the nerve power especially in full development; but neuralgia indicates a lower depressed state of vitality—a poor and weak state—and should be promptly placed under treatment.

ACCORDING to Herr Richard Andree there are 6,139,000 Jews in the world. Five-sixths live in Europe. Asia has 183,847. The greatest proportion is in Roumania, or twice as high as in Russia. Norway, he says, contains only thirty-four.

WASHINGTON'S ETIQUETTE.

President Washington never went to Congress on public business except in a state coach, drawn by six cream-colored horses. The coach was an object which would excite the admiration of the throng even now in the streets of London. It was built in the shape of a hemisphere, and its panels were adorned with cupids, surrounded with flowers worthy of Florida, and of fruit not to be equaled out of California. The coachmen and postillions were arrayed in gorgeous liveries of white and scarlet. The Philadelphia Gazette, a Government organ, regularly gave a supply of court news for the edification of the citizens. From that the people were allowed to learn as much as it was deemed proper for them to know about the President's movements, and a fair amount of space was also devoted to Mrs. Washington—who was not referred to as Mrs. Washington, but as "the amiable consort of our beloved President." When the President made his appearance at a ball or public reception, a dais was erected for him, upon which he might stand apart from the vulgar throng, and the guests or visitors bowed to him in solemn silence.

"Republican simplicity" has only come in later times. In our day the hack-driver who takes a visitor to a public reception at the White House is quite free to get off his box, walk in side by side with his fare and shake hands with the President with as much familiarity as anybody else. Very few persons presumed to shake hands with Gen. Washington. One of his friends, Gouverneur Morris, rashly undertook, for a foolish wager, to go up to him and slap him on the shoulder, saying, "My dear General, I am happy to see you look so well." The moment fixed upon arrived, and Mr. Morris, already half repenting of his wager, went up to the President, placed his hand upon his shoulder, and uttered the prescribed words. "Washington," as an eye-witness described the scene, "withdrew his hand, stepped suddenly back, fixed his eye on Morris for several minutes with an angry frown, until the latter retreated abashed, and sought refuge in the crowd." No one else ever tried a similar experiment. It is recorded of Washington that he wished the official title of the President to be "High Mightiness," and at one time it was proposed to engrave his portrait upon the national coinage. No royal levees were more punctiliously arranged than those of the first President.—Quarterly Review.

EIGHT DAYS IN A SNOWDRIFT.

Instances are not wanting of the almost-miraculous preservation of human beings when buried in a drift-wreath. Few more remarkable than the following will be found, which occurred at the village of Impington, about three miles from Cambridge. On the 2d of February, 1799, Mrs. Elizabeth Woodcock, a respectable resident of the village, on returning home from market was overtaken by a snowdrift. Lying down beside a hedge, she was completely enveloped, and remained there until the 10th of the month—a period of eight days and eight nights. During the interval, one of the villagers is said to have dreamed, on three different occasions, that a hare was to be found at a certain spot at the roadside near the village. Immediately after the last occasion, he resolved to go and see; and, on doing so, he discovered a handkerchief in a hole in the snow; and on further search, to his amazement, Mrs. Woodcock. She was conveyed, in full possession of her faculties, to her family and friends, who had given her up for lost. She said she had a distinct recollection of hearing the village bells chiming for the church service, on the day after that on which she was inwrapped in what she believed was to be her winding-sheet; and equally good was her hearing on the morning of the day on which she was rescued, when, on the bells again chiming, she recognized them. About thirty or forty years ago, a monument commemorative of the event, with an inscription stating the particulars, was erected on the spot; and persons are said to be still living in the village who remember having seen Mrs. Woodcock.—Chambers' Journal.

THE Coroner's jury heard the evidence, examined the body and then returned a verdict of death from exhaustion. The unfortunate man had been trying to start a new paper in Brooklyn.

"THERE'S too much horse-racing at your agricultural fairs," remarked Parson Jones to the Secretary of the county society. "I should like to know, sir, what horse-racing has to do with agriculture?" "Well, parson," replied the Secretary, with a pleasant smile, "nothing, perhaps; or, at least, no more than church lotteries have to do with the spreading of the gospel." Parson Jones saw the point, and changed the conversation immediately.

Regular trains have commenced running on the Georgia Pacific railroad from Atlanta to Douglassville, Ga.

It is estimated that between sixty and seventy thousand American tourists will go over to Europe this summer.

J. Q. Smith, who has been contesting Gen. C. M. Shelley's seat in Congress from the fourth Alabama district, died in Washington city, on last Friday.

Gen. Chalmers, of Mississippi has folded his tent and softly stolen over into the Republican camp. He finds "hash" more plentiful on that side perhaps.

The Southern Baptist Convention met in Greenville, S. C.; on the 8th inst. Among other business, the convention passed a resolution removing the board of Home Missions from Marion, Ala., to Atlanta, Ga.

Nine leading Georgia Independent Democrats met on the 15th, and issued an address to the people of the State, indefinitely postponing the mass meeting called for June 1st, and urging the party to support Hon. Alex. H. Stephens for Governor.

The Montgomery Advertiser, of the 16th inst., says: "The remains of Judge J. Q. Smith, reached the city last evening, and will be interred here. His death of course ends the contest for Shelley's seat in Congress, and the matter may be considered as finally settled."

A colored man was appointed by the Canadian government as letter carrier in the postoffice at Toronto, not long since. Whereupon fifty other carriers refused to work if a colored man was taken in. This is the first appointment of a colored man to civil service that the Canadian government has ever made.

The General Conference of the M. E. Church, South, now in session at Nashville, elected four new bishops on Monday, viz: Dr J. C. Granberry, Professor in the Vanderbilt University; Dr. Atticus G. Haygood, of Georgia; Rev. R. K. Hargrove, of Tennessee, and Dr. Linus Parker, of New Orleans.

Madame Nilsson made her first appearance in London since her husband's death in deep mourning. Her first notes betrayed her agitation by a tremulous quiver: but she bravely conquered herself, and her full, strong voice rang through the hall with all its old-timed sweetness. The audience applauded rapturously, but she firmly declined the encore.

Twenty-six Senators are to be chosen for the term beginning next March. They are from the States of Colorado, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Michigan, Nebraska, Alabama, New Hampshire, Arkansas, Texas, Delaware, Georgia, Kentucky, New Jersey, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and West Virginia.

New cotton factories are springing up almost every day in the cotton States, if the statements in the Columbus, Ga., Enquirer-Sun are correct. According to that paper there has been an increase of 361,600 spindles during 1881 and thus far in 1882. More than one-half of this increase is found in South Carolina and Georgia. It is proper to note that all of this advance and progress is going on under the rule of those "Bourbons" who are supposed by many credulous people at the North to be half horse, half alligator.

Col. J. B. Killebrew has just returned from an extended tour through the Great Warrior coal field of North Alabama. He speaks in the most enthusiastic terms of the magnificent field for mineral development there, and brought back with him specimens of coal from a seven-foot vein that will compare with any coal in the world. He says the people of Alabama seem to have no adequate conception of the immense wealth lying dormant in this remarkable region.—Nashville American.

The excitement which the murder of Lord Cavendish produced in Ireland seems to have been as great if not greater than that caused in America by the assassination of President Garfield. The Irish people are sending communications to Premier Gladstone, expressive of horror and indignation at the crime. Mr. George Otto Trevelyan has been appointed to succeed Lord Cavendish as Chief Secretary for Ireland. He is in sympathy with the Irish people and their cause. That he may be instrumental in delivering them from their troubles and tribulations is devoutly to be wished.

Paul Strobach thinks he is a very sharp fellow. In his contest for Col. Herbert's seat, he has secured Bob Ingersoll to make argument for his case before the Committee. But Bob's brilliancy, facility and perversity will not make black white, nor will Strobach's shrewd scheme work. The Committee may decide to oust Herbert, but if so, it will be a part merely of a deliberate, malice-aforethought design, to be executed regardless of facts and obstacles. Bob Ingersoll will not be the cause of it. Strobach is wasting his money.

Blaine to Run for Congress.

PORTLAND, May 8.—It comes on what must be regarded as good authority that Mr. Blaine has agreed to run for Congress on a general ticket, provided the petitions come back with the number of signatures as large as is expected. This makes his candidacy practically assured, for sufficient returns from the State have already been received to make it certain that "his country's call" is urgent. The strongest response has been from this city and from Mr. Blaine's old district. The friends of the many-scarred political warrior thus states his position: "Mr. Blaine does not want to return to Congress; he is very averse to so doing; but if his party unanimously calls on him to fill the breach, in view of past favors he will feel it his duty," &c.

Chalmer's Kick.

WASHINGTON, May 12.—The sulky kick of Chalmers, which the Courier-Journal was the first to fully explain, was the grand theme among Southern members to-day. There were all sorts of reason given for the conduct of this doughty General, and one was that he is financially broken and offered himself to the Administration to do a job of Mahonizing for the purpose of mending his fortunes, while tearing holes in his party.

Senator George thinks he has made a great mistake, and that he will now discover that he is not the popular man in Mississippi that he has always regarded himself.

Mr. Money says he can not carry the district.

Mr. Muldrow says he will have no following, now that it has taken the shape of a personal grievance.

Manning, who now sits from the Second district, contested by Buchman, says he carried his district by a good majority before, and he believes he can beat Chalmers easier than any other man likely to run.—Courier-Journal Special.

TUSKALOOSA.

Notes of the Old Capital—The Druid City and Its People Fifty Years Ago.

NUMBER IV.

Ye book men and ye books! "Mr. White," sold books, with a passion for fine editions and binding, and old authors, just above the Washington Hall. The genial old gentleman yet lives in the new capital. May he live to a hundred years! Woodruff occupied successively several stands. He knew his calling.

Macauley's Essays, the Waverly Novels (which everybody read or claimed to have read), Maryatt, Ingraham, Bulwer, were the rage. The pulpits condemned, the college professors denounced, but the people and the students read. The old folks said mind and morals would be hopelessly damaged, but the young folks didn't care. Times change and we change with them. It was a reading time. Social intercourse of young ladies and gentlemen was rather upon literary culture and intelligence, than on wealth and style. Poetical tributes were common, but they signalized accomplishments of mind as well as person. See Meek's poems, and Smith's.

The Southron was started, and filled with fresh and forcible articles. But the South never learned to patronize its own. Meek, Inge, Smith, Barnard, could not be heard, when they pleaded, and wrote as few have written. Dr. Alva Woods, illustrated the University commencements, with a series of baccalaureates, which, for finish and classic aroma, have never since been equaled. Some few persons took the Southern Review, Charleston, unsurpassed in ability, but short-lived, like every other Southern literary enterprise, save the Literary Messenger, Richmond.

A distinguished professor in one of the colleges, was once temporarily employed at the same time, by both the Democratic and Whig papers of Tuskaloosa, as editor. He boldly advocated the doctrines of both parties; so hot the contest became, that each paper resorted to personal abuse, bitter and scorching. The readers of either were sure that the other was extinguished. I guess this statement, which I afterwards received from the proprietor of one of the papers, will be new to the oldest inhabitant. The redoubtable professor has even a European reputation now, as a savant.

Scoville is applying for a writ of habeas corpus to recover his wife, who he says is a little daft and illegally restrained of her liberty by John W. Guiteau. Reed is pegging away at Washihgton on his bill of exceptions in the assassin Guiteau's case, and a long-suffering country has to bear it all in silence. Scoville should be given his wife on condition that he take her and all the other Guiteaus and bundle them off to Symm's Hole.

County Matters.

Little attention has as yet been given in the county to sending a representative to the next Legislature. It is presumable, however, that candidates enough will yet come out. The farmers are paying great attention to the crops; and politics with them is at a dead ebb. The crops from all sections are reported in good condition, but the recent cold spell will cause some injury to the cotton. Little damage will result to the peach crop, owing to its advanced state, and a fine yield may be expected. The grain crops throughout the county are excellent, and an abundant yield will tend to encourage the farmers to continue to plant bread stuffs to the exclusion of cotton.

Mr. Chas. Werdman, of Calera, presented us the other day with a fine specimen of iron ore, which was found on 'Squire John Boyd's place, near Clear Creek, in this county. We say it is fine because Mr. Werdman says so. If he doesn't know its quality no one does. He is one of the best mineralogist in the State. He has explored the country from New York city to Pike's Peak. He says that the mineral deposits of our county are inexhaustible. Mr. J. V. Teague, of Calera, owns a considerable amount of mineral land adjoining 'Squire Boyd's.

Jemison Jottings.

Messrs. Regans and Bro. are erecting a fine saw mill four miles southwest of this place.

Mr. W. L Bandy, who has spent the winter and spring in Florida for his health will return home soon. His many friends will welcome his return.

Our school is progressing finely, and Mr. Burns is an excellent teacher. He is the teacher we have long needed at Jemison.

Mr. C. H. Smith and clerk went fishing on Friday last and caught 444 pounds of fine perch. Our waters are teeming with fish.

Preaching here three Sundays in the month, and we have a flourishing Sabbath school.

Jottings from Mahon's Creek.

The farmers are pushing ahead and are well up with their crops. Wheat is ripening quite fast, but is much injured by rust. Many are cutting wheat. Oats promise a fine yield, that is the rust proof. Other varieties are injured with rust.

We have more small grain sowed, more corn planted and less cotton this year than usual. We look for better times. We have no mortgages out in this neighborhood.

Our excellent county surveyor, Mr. J. L. Williams, was with us a few days not long since, looking after some land lines that have troubled surveyors for thirty years. Mr. Williams established lines satisfactory to all parties. He knows his calling, and is an excellent surveyor.

Calera News.

Rev. J. P. Word has removed from Oxford to Calera.

The old Calera Hotel was safely "landed" at its future site near the crossing last Friday, the house is 50 by 70 feet, plastered and has two stack chimneys and was rolled three hundred feet without damage, nor did the moving of it interfere in the least with the business of the house as it was kept open all the while. The weight of the house is estimated, (chimneys and all) at eight hundred thousand pounds. Was such a feat ever accomplished before in Alabama?

If you want to see a crowd of men laugh, just let some person mention the possibilities of Calera's future in Columbiana or Montevallo. Why they can laugh louder, longer and deeper than Elyton ever did at Birmingham or Decatur at Atlanta. Calera takes it good naturally, and improves all the time, for she knows Montevallo and Columbiana believes in her future and tremble in their boots.

RUFUS.

Of all the hotels in the country, the Calera House, kept by Mrs. J. D. Campbell is the best. There is little wonder that every one likes to stop over at Calera, and after you have stopped at the Calera House once, you will want to do so again. Mrs. Campbell understands the art of keeping a good hotel, as well as filling her guests with good cheer.

Three prisoners incarcerated in the county jail at Brookhaven, Miss., set fire to the jail, and before the doors could be opened, they perished in the flames.

A Pleasant Affair.

MR. EDITOR:—I had the pleasure of attending one of the most pleasant sociables at Maj. J. M. Biving's, on Monday evening last, that I ever attended. Music, dancing and eating were the amusements indulged in. It is useless for me to even hint that there was at least "one soul made happy." The party consisted of only a few of Verbena's fair daughters, and some of her sons, as for the fairness of the latter (well, you know how that is yourself) and a few intimate friends near home.

The music by Maj. Bivings, on the violin, accompanied by Misses McLemore and McKenzie, was too sweet for sourners to comment on, so I desist. There were several songs by the different ladies each of which was very sweet indeed. The supper was very fine, consisting of meats of several kinds, cakes of several kinds, and strawberries and ice cream in profusion.

The Maj. and Mrs. Bivings certainly have the heartfelt thanks of all who were present for one of their most pleasant evenings.

The Secret of Genius.

"They talk," said Tom Marshall to an intimate friend, "of my astonishing bursts of eloquence, and doubtless imagine it is my genius bubbling over. It is nothing of the sort. I'll tell you how I do it:

"I select a subject, and study it from the ground up. When I have mastered it fully, I write a speech on it. Then I take a walk, and come back and revise and correct. In a few days I subject it to another pruning, and then recopy it, Next I add the finishing touches, round it off with graceful periods, and commit it to memory. Then I speak it in the fields, in my father's lawn and before my mirror, until gesture and delivery are perfect. It sometimes takes me six weeks or two months to get up a speech. When I have one prepared, I come to town. I generally select a court day, when there is sure to be a crowd. I am called on for a speech and am permitted to select my own subject. I speak my piece. It astonishes the people, as I intended it should, and they go away marveling at my power of oratory. They call it genius, but it is the hardest kind of work."

A Good Omen.

Every established local newspaper receives subscription from large cities which puzzle the publishers to account for, but which the New York Times lately explained in the following: A wholesale grocer in this city who has become rich at the business says his rule is that when he sells a bill of goods on a credit to immediately subscribe for the local paper of his debtor. So long as his customer advertises liberally and vigorously he rested, but as soon as he began to contract his advertising space he took the fact as evidence that there was trouble ahead and invariably went for his debtor. Said he, the man who is too poor to make his business known is too poor to do business. The withdrawal of advertisements is evidence of weakness that business men are not slow to act upon.

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHOEA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

WHERE CORSETS COME FROM.

Mr. Catlin, the American Consul at Stuttgardt, in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, writes in one of his reports to the Government of the United States a statement of the corset trade of that country, especially with the United States. As corsets are an article of universal use in this country, he considers it instructive to let the American ladies know how much they contribute to the employment of the poor women in far-off Wurtemberg. The manufacture of woven corsets in that kingdom began in 1848. Its progress was slow until in 1856 orders from the United States gave a strong impetus to the trade, but the great development of the trade began in 1865, at the close of the war in the United States.

Since that time, one-third of the total value of all the exports of Wurtemberg to the United States has been in woven corsets. The total annual production (in 1880) of corsets in the kingdom is 1,250,000, valued at $750,000, requiring 40,000 pounds of cotton yarn. The industry requires sixteen distinct processes in the change of the raw material to the finished corset. These are the weaving, cutting out, stitching, stamping, embroidering, insertion of whalebones, punching eyelet holes, washing, starching, shaping, ironing, eyeletting, clasping, measuring and boxing. In the manufacture of these goods 1,700 handlooms and about 4,500 persons are employed. About 1,700 are male weavers. All the work except the weaving is done by female operatives, and most of the work is done at home. These women earn an average of $6.50 per month, and the male weavers from $17 to $18 per month. The new French tariff has cut off the trade with that country, though the trade with the United States, England and South America is still maintained. The German tariff, by increasing the duty on yarn, has also injured the profits of the business. Following the close of the American war, the export of these corsets to the United States, which had been $250,000 a year, rapidly increased in 1866 to $986,000, and in 1872 to $1,119,000, but since has declined to $317,000 in 1880, and rose again in 1881 to $500,000.

There were imported to this country in 1881 about 15,000 dozen corsets, valued at not less than $6 per dozen, and over 50,000 dozen of an average value of $9 per dozen. On these there was levied and collected a duty of $187,500, or about 35 per cent. The cost price of the best quality landed in this country was a fraction less than 75 cents a corset, which, adding the duty, made the cost over $1 each.

The great increase in the Wurtemberg production and sale of corsets to this country following for several years the close of our war was due to the increased demand from this country to supply the colored population, to whom emancipation for the first time made corsets an indispensable article of dress. From 1865 to 1872 there were perhaps 10,000,000 of corsets sent to the United States, at a cost, with the duty added, of about the same number of dollars. The manufacture of cheaper goods and of inferior materials has since then reduced the consumption of Wurtemberg corsets in this country to about $350,000 a year.—Chicago Tribune.

MODERN FABLES.

A man having a desire to crop the tail of his Dog, persuaded the simple animal that by submitting to the operation it would become the sole subject of Athenian conversation. The faithful brute fell in with the suggestion, and, to show its gratitude, wheeled suddenly round and attempted to lick his master's hand at the critical moment, with the disastrous effect that the blow severed its tail just behind the ears.

Moral—This fable teaches, first, the importance of always aiming at the right end, and, secondly, the impropriety of interrupting a man in his attempt to cut a tale short.

A Hedge-Sparrow, having adopted (with full surrender) a young Cuckoo, soon found that the Diet of Worms demanded by the little stranger was taxing severely her own limited resources. In this strait she was sorely tempted to turn the Cuckoo out; but, repressing the unworthy thought, she had herself incorporated as an Orphans' Home, and lived sumptuously upon the stores contributed by the generous birds for its support.

Moral—Be it ever so humble, there's no place like a Home.

When the St. Petersburg Golos thought it had shown praiseworthy enterprise in sending a special correspondent into the Herzegovina insurrectionary districts, its less-energetic rivals rose to the occasion and got the Austrians to shoot him as an agitator and rebel. And thus harmony and equality were restored to the journalistic circles of the Russian capital.

Puck has been hunting up the pedigree of Dr. Tanner, the celebrated hungry man, and finds he is of very ancient lineage. The forty-third verse of chapter nine, Acts of Apostles, reads: "And it came to pass that he tarried many days with one Simon A. Tanner."—Burlington Hawkeye.

CLOSE ATMOSPHERE, NIGHT AIR AND LATE SUPPERS.

A word as to the air of churches, theaters and other crowded assemblies. Such air is not only notoriously impure (for who ever saw a sexton or a janitor who knew how to ventilate properly and not overheat?), but it creates danger even beyond the local effects of its foulness upon the lungs. It lowers the physical tone of every person present; for, first, it prevents the escape of impurities from the blood, and, secondly, it offers to the blood material which is simply poisonous. The atmosphere of a crowded place may even cause typhus fever. But I am speaking merely of the unhinging effect of the air of our ordinary assemblies. It not only interferes with our enjoyment of a sermon, a play, a concert, but it lets us down so far from a well-toned condition that our power of resistance to cold is lessened, and when we go out into the winter air we become very easily chilled, and much lung trouble is the result. For we are not exposed to this unnatural influence once merely during the winter, but several times, more or less, every week. "The clergyman," says our caustic writer, "expends mental force in vain if he thinks to contend with foul air, a very device of the evil one."

A few words concerning night air, of in which so many people live in needless fear that Dr. Ingelhaus calls their affection aerophobia. It is a very common belief that night air is unhealthy, but, as Florence Nightingale sensibly remarks, "We must breathe night air at night;" and she might have added, "If pure night air be shut out, then we breathe foul night air." The popular idea that night air is impure and unhealthful is an error which costs life. Mene found that the night air of Paris actually contained less carbonic acid than the day air. We all know how sweet and fresh the air of summer nights always is. Why should it be less so on a winter night, when the vigorous winds are renewing and refreshing it?

The common idea that the habit of eating at bed-time is injurious probably arose from a lack of sense in the choice of food. Mince pie, pickles, rich pastry, fried oysters, salads and the like, at the sleeping hour, are like so much rusty iron to many stomachs; but lean roast beef or mutton, bread and butter, raw oysters, a cup of beef tea, bread and milk, if taken in moderate quantities, will not only do no harm, but in winter, particularly after a drive, the theater or a concert, will give one comfortable warmth and healthful repose.—Exchange.

WILD BEASTS AND SNAKES IN INDIA.

It is with somewhat more than ordinary interest that we have for some years past awaited the annual records setting forth the fearful ravages wrought by tigers and other wild animals, and by snakes, throughout our Indian empire. From a brief notice which appears in the columns of a contemporary we now learn that there has been a steady decrease, from 1876 to 1880, in the total number of wild animals destroyed throughout Hindoostan, coupled, however, with a proportionate increase in the number of persons killed by wild animals and snakes. Thus, whereas in the year first named there were destroyed in Hindoostan no fewer than 23,459 wild beasts, in 1880 the figures diminished to 14,886; but, during this same period, the number of human beings who have lost their lives has mounted up from 19,272 to 21,955! One satisfactory feature observable in the present annual returns is that relating to the great increase in the number of snakes destroyed in the Bombay Presidency alone. Of course, it must be a matter of impossibility to suggest an antidote for the mortal injuries inflicted by a wild beast such as the tiger, but there would seem to be a good field now presented for the further prosecution of the experiments already made by Dr. De Lacerda in connection with a specific for snake bite.—English paper.

THE EDITOR AND THE COMMITTEE.

One day the editor was visited by a committee of villagers to urge upon him some arguments in favor of a new town-pump. Being an amiable man, although it was just his busiest hour, he asked them to be seated until he had finished an article he was writing on an application of the principle of ensilage to green picket-fences. While waiting they all began to talk to each other at the very pitch of their voices, until the distracted editor could stand it no longer, when, wheeling round in his chair, he remarked, with an expression sweetly utter: "You'd oblige me, gentlemen, by conducting your conversation in a lower tone. There's a man sick with the small-pox in the next room, and you might disturb him." As he gathered up the hats, canes and umbrellas that were left by the committee in their eager bolt for the fresh air, he said to himself, quietly: "I reckon I'm going to be a success in journalism."

Usually such things as are advertised possess no value. But who would say that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup possesses no merit? It is the standard remedy of our age. Price 25 cents a bottle.

POOR PHILIP VANDERDONK.

All his life he had toiled and saved and scraped, and pulled every string that had a dollar at the end of it. And now all his hard-earned-wealth was gone, and a great hateful, interest-eating mortgage spreads its black wings over all he owned and loved on earth. He shrank into a chair, and, folding his arms upon the table in front of him, bowed his gray head upon them and groaned great groans from Groanville, Groan county. His heart seemed breaking.

"Did you mortgage the farm?" asked his wife anxiously, stealing softly to his side.

"Yes," he growled, "both farms, and sold the wood lot over on Big Island."

"And did you have to mortgage the town house, too?" she asked with quivering lips and glistening eyes.

"Oh, yes," said the man in hollow tones. "Oh, yes, and sold all my stock in the Northern, and hypothecated what I had in the Sixth Street bridge."

"And was it enough?" she asked, trembling with eagerness. "Was it enough?"

"Not quite," he growled, and then, as he saw the ghastly pallor of deathly disappointment spread over her face, he added, "but the milliner let me have it on ninety days' time for the balance at 8 per cent."

"And you've brought my new hat home, then?" she caroled joyously. "Oh, Philip, you dear old duck!"

"Well, no, not all of it," he said. "I brought the plume and one of the bows down with me in the express, but the hat itself is coming down from Chicago on a flat-car."

And the next week after that, eleven dark-browed men, who sat behind Philip's wife at the theater, waylaid the wretched man on his way home, hauled him off down Valley street, rolled him into a wad, and stopped up the new sewer with him.—Burlington Hawkeye.

"I have little about me, but that little we will share," said a Dublin Queen's Counsel to an ugly customer who, with a menacing air, asked for alms at night in a lonely suburb. "This revolver," said the Q. C., as he drew it from his pocket, "has six chambers. I will give you three—" Just then the Q. C. found himself alone.

Statistics, which have been carefully gathered, show that the emigration from Germany in the last sixty years has amounted to 3,500,000, the greatest share of which—about seven-eighths—has taken place since 1850, and mostly to the United States.

A Telling Law.

Mr. Charles Law, Jr., in conversation with one of our representatives, recently said: "I have been a sufferer from rheumatism and neuralgia for the past ten years, and tried all kinds of remedies. Having heard so much about St. Jacobs Oil, I tried a bottle, and found it truly wonderful."—Pottstown (Pa.) Ledger.

The Murray Hill Publishing Company received an order from a gentleman in the West whose letter-head shows that he is Postmaster, Notary Public, Justice of the Peace, undertaker, a dealer in headstones, groceries, dry goods, notions, hardware, tinware, saddlery, boots and shoes and agricultural implements. We would recommend our friend to study veterinary surgery, finishing with a course in human medicine, and with these added accomplishments he will be able to attend to every want of his neighborhood.

Mr. Ed. Trickett, the celebrated oarsman, Kingston, Canada, says: "I have found St. Jacobs Oil a sure and certain cure for rheumatism, etc."—New York Clipper.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said an Irish lawyer, "it will be for you to say whether the defendant shall be allowed to come into court with unblushing footsteps, with a cloak of hypocrisy in his mouth, and draw three bullocks out of my client's pocket with impunity."

"Now Well and Strong."

SHIPMAN, Illinois.

Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I wish to state that my daughter, aged 18, was pronounced incurable and was fast failing as the doctors thought, with consumption. I obtained a half dozen bottles of your "Golden Medical Discovery" for her, and she commenced improving at once, and is now well and strong. Very truly yours,

Sick Headache.

Mrs. J. C. Henderson, of Cleveland, Ohio, writes: "The use of two of Pierce's 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets' a day, for a few weeks has entirely cured me of sick headache, from which I formerly suffered terribly, as often, on an average, as once in ten days." Of all druggists.

There are not more than 300 professional burglars in America, and yet to keep them out of our homes we pay $5,000,000 per year for locks, bolts, and fasteners. Ten thousand dollars apiece per year would hire them to be good.

There are many amusing superstitions still prevalent among the herring fishermen of England and Scotland. For years the Manx fishers dared not put to sea without a dead wren to ward off storms and disaster. This was due to a tradition of a sea spirit which hunted the herrings and was attended by storms; at length it took the form of a wren and flew away. Consequently a dead wren was thought to keep things straight. As lately as 1854 the herring fishery, being very bad at Banff, Scotland, some fishermen dressed a cooper in a flannel shirt "with burs stuck all over it," and carried him in procession through the town in a handbarrow. This was done to bring better luck.

Kidney-Wort cures piles. It has a soothing and healing action that is very potent.

From Mississippi

CORINTH, Miss., April 2, 1877.

Capt. W P Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.:

Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chronic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the Liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of the bowels disappeared, and a comfortable state of health was soon established. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,

D S. MALONE.

A mountain mule standing near a magazine of giant powder when it exploded was hurled end over end seventy-five feet to the bottom of the dump pile on which he stood. When the smoke cleared away he stood quietly picking the bunch grass, not in the least disturbed. He had lifted people like that himself and knew how it was done.

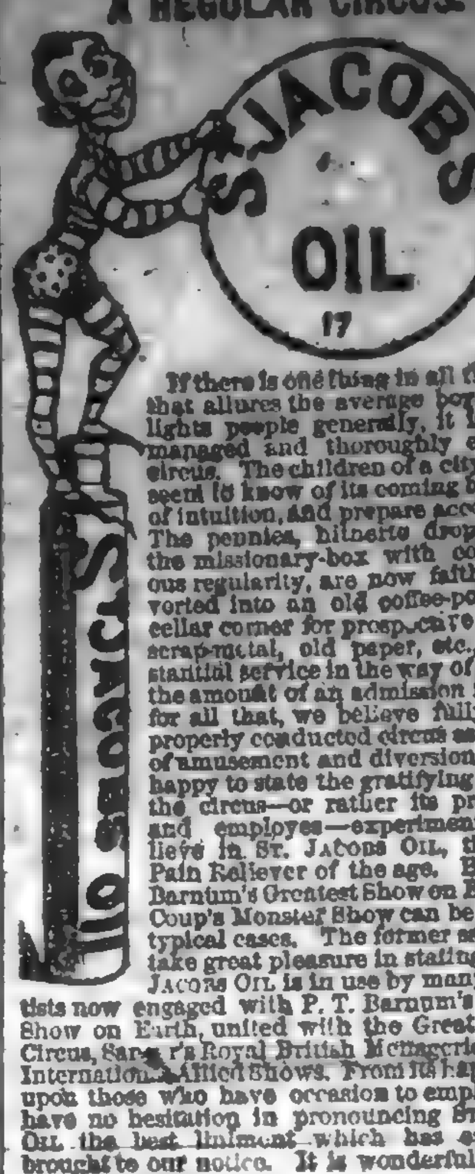
THE DIAMOND DYES.



A REGULAR CIRCUS.

If there is one thing in all the world that allures the average boy and delights people generally, it is a well managed and thoroughly equipped circus. The children of a city or town seem to know of its coming by a kind of intuition, and prepare accordingly. The pennies, hitherto dropped into the missionary-box with conscientious regularity, are now faithfully diverted into an old coffee-pot in the cellar corner for prospective use, and scrap-metal, old paper, etc., do substantial service in the way of securing the amount of an admission fee. But for all that, we believe fully in the properly conducted circus as a means of amusement and diversion, and are happy to state the gratifying fact that the circus—or rather its proprietors and employes—experimentally believe in ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great Pain Reliever of the age. Hon. P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth and Coup's Monster Show can be taken as typical cases. The former says: "We take great pleasure in stating that ST. JACOBS OIL is in use by many ring artists now engaged with P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth, united with the Great London Circus, Sanger's Royal British Menagerie and the International Allied Shows. From its happy effect upon those who have occasion to employ it, we have no hesitation in pronouncing ST. JACOBS OIL the best liniment which has ever been brought to our notice. It is wonderfully efficacious in subduing pain.

(Signed) BARNUM, BAILEY & HUTCHINSON."

The Press Agent of Coup's Monster Show says: "In cases of rheumatism or complaints of that kind our artists know how to cure themselves very speedily. ST. JACOBS OIL is a very popular remedy among our people for rheumatic pains, and as long as they can get it they won't suffer much."

Mr. Frank I. Frayne says: "I have suffered terribly from rheumatism in my right shoulder and arm, and at the same time I had severe pains in my chest. Sometime since I read something in a newspaper about the remarkable cures of ST. JACOBS OIL, and I thought I would try that remedy. I tell you I am mighty glad I did, for after using one or two bottles of that preparation I felt no pain whatever, and have had none since. I am firm believer in ST. JACOBS OIL, and I want everybody in my company to keep it near them."

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy, has in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians, have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

[illegible] her newly-acquired importance somewhat, and stepped around briskly, dusting the musty little office, and watering the few plants in the window, but, there being absolutely nothing to do, she dropped into inactivity and listened to the click of the telegraph instruments, which to her was as companionable as the talk of near friends would be. As the afternoon passed drowsily along the heat and stillness overcame her, and, dropping her flaxen head on the desk before her, she was soon—as one of the good old ladies of Parkerstown was wont to express it—"in the arms of Morphine."

Afterward, the first thing she could remember about it, a voice seeming to come from her dreams said: "'Tain't likely she's left here alone, and asleep; too."

"No," responded another evil voice, "the old man's prob'ly around somewhere—but," in a lower tone, "come on, let's go 'long. The down train'll be along, and we'll lay 'em out."

Nixie was wide-awake enough now, but she had presence of mind in her small body, and realized that safety lay in keeping still.

"How fur is it up there?"

"Sh! Keep mum. Do you want to knock the hull thing in the head, and yourself, too?" and then the girl's quickened hearing caught the sound of heavy footsteps passing by the window and on up the track.

Nixie waited until she couldn't hear the foot-steps, and then cautiously turned and looked out of the window. There they were—two miserable-looking tramps hastening up the track. She recognized them at once as two men who had been discharged from a construction train that had been at work down the road. What should she do! Oh! if she could send for her father? But there was no one anywhere near, and beside, by the time he could get home it might be too late—for it was evident that the desperate wretches were bent upon revenging themselves of their fancied wrongs upon the innocent. She looked at the clock. Half-past 4! She ran out and looked around the lonely station. No one living in sight. She called once, feebly—but where was the use. If she sent for her father she had no tangible explanation to give or real reason to make him hurry home—only she was sure there was harm coming to the down-train—that long, crowded express filled with mountain tourists. But she must do someting.

The men had disappeared around a slight bend in the track. Nixie ran in, locked up the office, snatching a hat from a nail in the corner, and then hurried up the track until she arrived at the slight curve. Then she "made haste more slowly," for there were the men. Stepping behind a clump of bushes she watched them. They had stopped and were doing something, she could not at first see what, to the track. Pretty soon, up came a rail, and in a minute more it was thrown down a steep ledge within four feet of the track—where the whole train must be precipitated in less than an hour if something could not be done to warn them. Nixie saw it all now and for a moment stood, her eyes dilated with horror, while she saw the scoundrels shake their fists toward her way and heard an imprecation. Then they passed on and Nixie, grown cold in the sudden extremity, turned and sped toward the depot.

The rail had been removed on a curve which was shaded on the west side by a high bank so that at half-past 5 it was quite dusk there, and, as the trains always came in on a down grade, they came at full speed. So Nixie thought to herself, "I'm so glad I came, for now I'll hurry and telegraph to Stratford before the train comes by, and then we'll see, Mr. Tramps, how your little scheme comes out."

She reached the office and looked at the clock. Five minutes to five! and the train left Stratford at 5:08. Well, eight minutes was plenty of time if she could "raise" Stratford. She grasped the key. "Sd-sd-sd," clicked the instrument. Never before was there so impatient an operator on that line. With her eyes on the clock which seemed then, if ever, to say, "forever—never—never—forever," she kept up the call. Somebody on the other side "broke her" twice, but she gave all the danger signals she could think of and kept on. The moments kept on—one, two, three, four, five—slowly pealed the old clock—each stroke an agony to the girl.

Meanwhile the agent at Stratford could not operate at all, and the boy, who could and who served as a general chore-boy about the place, had gone for the cows, and there was no one to answer the call on which so much depended.

A few minutes and it was too late, and Nixie was in a new dilemma.

Nixie closed the key in despair. She did not know the train signals, but she seized the red flag under the old desk and ran for dear life—literally the dear lives of her fellow-creatures. Not until she got to the wrecked place did she remember that she must go beyond the curve to stop them or she would be of no use. Already she heard the approaching train rumble in the distance. Faster, faster she sped round the curve straight up the track. She could see them now coming in. On they rushed, the great engine bent on destroying its precious freight. Nixie stopped in the midst of the track and frantically swung her red flag, but still the monster rushed toward her, showing no abatement of speed.

Meanwhile the engine and fireman had seen the slight form of the girl, and the fireman stood aghast to see the engineer so utterly regardless of her.

"Stop, man!" he shouted; "don't you see the girl?"

"Yes," said the half-drunk engineer. "Why don't the little fool get out of my way? I'll teach her," and made no movement to stop.

Nixie waited with a sinking heart. Oh, why did everything go against her? Was it the will of God that this dreadful thing must happen? The engine was close upon her and she ran upon a jutting rock by the railroad still waving her scarlet flag; but just as the engine came alongside of her she heard the sharp click of the call-bell in the engine and saw the fireman thrust the engineer aside and reverse the engine. The conductor, who had just seen her and excitedly pulled the bell-rope, jumped off and came toward her. But the reaction was too much for poor Nixie and she could only gasp out "Round the curve," and then she was a white heap with no sense of anything.

Passengers rushed out, and, after some had been to the curve and seen what the little plain girl had saved them from, no lady in the land could be so royally waited upon as Nixie when she had been lifted into the car and told modestly her little story. It was some time before the track was ready for the train to proceed, and many kind hands pressed her in farewell while the conductor left something in her hand, too, just as the train left, saying, "You are the bravest little woman in the State."

Not until she had been in the office a good half-hour with her father—who had got home from his lawsuit and wondered what had made the train so late and where Nixie had gone to—and told him all the story, did Nixie think to look at the packet. Then she read a note: "Will Miss Eunice Markham accept the accompanying from the friends she so bravely saved Aug. 23, 1880?"

The note was wrapped round $500 in bank notes.

"Oh, papa! now you can pay off the mortgage on the house," cried Nixie, and the father said:

"I declare, Nick, you get higher wages as agent than I do!"

The Superintendent of the Q. & L. Railroad Company came down to Parkerston that week, and soon after there was a vacancy in one of the best offices of the company in a neighboring city, and Mr. Markham was tendered the situation. He accepted, "So that Nixie can have the schooling she wants so much," he said, and to-day Miss Eunice Markham is one of the most promising pupils in the high school of that city. But more than ever is she the pride of her father's heart, who never tires of telling of the afternoon "his girl was station agent."

But after all you would never have taken her for a heroine.

JEWS IN RUSSIA.

Peter the Great was the first to admit Jews into Russia. They emigrated to that country in large numbers, and at first were treated fairly. Christian prejudice was soon aroused, and in 1743 the Empress Elizabeth expelled 35,000. They were readmitted by the Empress Catherine. Until the time of the Emperor Alexander I., in whom they found a friend, they were held in the most abject condition, and denied all the more important privileges of citizens. Alexander granted them full liberty of trade and commerce. But the decrees of Alexander were canceled by his successor, Nicholas, and since that time, in spite of the scheme of 1835, which contemplated the improvement of their condition, and the extension of their liberties, and occasional and intermittent favors of a subsequent date, the Jews have had a hard fate in Russia. In Poland they found a home at a much earlier date. As early as the fourteenth century they were in high favor at court, a Jewish maiden of great beauty having won the affections of Casimir the Great, and for many years the whole trade of the country was in their hands. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries they had fallen into disfavor, and they gradually sank into a condition of deplorable ignorance and most abject poverty. To this day the Polish Jew, in spite of admitted improvement in late years, is the meanest in Europe, one of the most wretched specimens of existing humanity. Up to the time of Nicholas, Jews were not allowed to possess land, to give evidence in civil suits, to have synagogues, or to inhabit the holy cities of Kiew and Moscow. They were obliged to wear a particular dress so that their nationality could not be mistaken, and out of every Jewish family one child was always taken by the state to be educated as a Christian at his parents' cost. Some of their disabilities have since been removed. The Jew has his synagogue, his schools, his municipal privileges, and he is allowed to celebrate the festivals of his church with public displays. But he is not yet in the enjoyment of equal rights with the native population around him. He holds no land, but he trades, and trades successfully, and it is estimated that two-thirds of the trade of the Southern states and at least one-third of that in the North is in Jewish hands.

HOWELLS' FIRST LITERARY WORK.

It is now a little more than twenty years since Mr. W. D. Howells made his first visit to Boston, bringing in his carpet-bag a number of poems, which were soon printed in the Atlantic Monthly. He had already sent to the East some of his verses, which had appeared in the same magazine. Many of these, by their form, and still more by their deep, cheerless gloom, showed that their author had a great admiration for Heine, the wonderful master of epigrammatic sadness. With years and actual experience the sadness—which was of the willful sort that belongs to youth—wore away, but Mr. Howells' hand retained the neatness of touch which is apparent even in the slightest of these verses. At about the same time he published a few longer poems, in a narrative form, and it is curious to see in these some of the qualities that are familiar to us in his later novels.

* * * * *

These poems had been written by Mr. Howells in the scant leisure moments of a busy youth. He was born in Ohio, in the year 1837; his father was editor and publisher of a country newspaper, and it was at a very early age that the subject of this article began to set type and learn the printer's trade. Throughout his boyhood, and in fact until 1859, he worked in his father's printing-office, although for two or three years before that date he had exercised his pen as a Legislative reporter, and then as "news editor" of the Ohio State Journal at Columbus. What intervals his work granted him were taken for reading and, in time, for writing, and the early fruits of his pen appeared in a volume called "Poems of Two Friends," which was published at Columbus, in December, 1859. The other writer, who indeed was the author of the greater number of the poems, was Mr. J. J. Piatt, who has since written many pleasing verses. These two young poets had worked together in a printing-office, where they spent the years which so many young men waste in college. In the summer of 1861 Mr. Howells wrote a life of Lincoln, a book which had a large sale in the West, and in the autumn of that year he was appointed Consul at Venice. —Century Magazine.

THE TALE OF A SHIRT.

In the course of a confidential conversation with a friend who had recently had two new shirts made, we learned incidentally that the style of building shirts had radically changed, and that they were being made to button in front instead of at the back of the neck. The news was so good that we could not believe it until we had it directly from a shirtmaker, who showed us the ground plan and front elevation that had been prepared by architects for the erection of some fine shirts for our best citizens, and sure enough the old fashion of folding doors in front, instead of a storm-door between the shoulder blades in the back, was the fashion. We have never felt so much like passing a resolution of thanks to the shirtmakers, and a resolution of condolence to parties who have got to wear the old ones, in our life. Those shirts that button in the back have been the cause of more profanity than any one thing. Shirts that button in the back have been the cause of crime. Religious societies cannot prosper as they should when the male population has to reach over its head, and away around to the back of the neck to button its shirt. Talk about spending thousands of dollars to find the North pole; if half the money spent in that way was offered as a reward for the detection of the man who invented shirts that buttoned in the back, and he could be turned loose among men that have suffered for years by his devilish contrivance, it would be well expended.

For fourteen years the men of this country have been slaves to this absurd fashion, and more arms have been cramped, shoulders dislocated and backs bent than would be believed by those who have not seen it. The spectacle of a mild-mannered man, after getting into his shirt, making a contortionist of himself, an acrobat, trying to get on the other side of himself to button his shirt the back way, is sad indeed. Statistics show that buttons on the back of a shirt always come off the second week, and in the place of the thin, oyster-shell button that comes with the shirt, the housewife always sews on a big drawers button, four sizes larger than the button hole, and, if he gets the button in the hole, the hole has to be "bushed" or a washer put on the button next time. Go through our prisons and you will find that the criminals, the bad men, wear shirts that button in the back. They have been driven to a life of crime by letting their tempers get the best of them while searching blindly for a button with one hand, and a button-hole with the other, when their backs were turned. They go from home mad, and commit crime to get even.

The bare idea of having shirts that open in front will give a feeling of rest to tired back-aching humanity. To stand up to the glass and button a shirt, and see what you are about, will be bliss indeed. The thought of a generous slit in the bosom of a shirt, where one's hand may wander, is elysium. There are times—we say it advisedly—there are times when the best of us want to put a hand inside a shirt bosom; but with the old shirt that buttons in the back a man might as well be a burglar-proof safe, with the combination lost, as to try to get in. With the old shirt it would be absolutely necessary to hire a hand.

A man's stomach has been a sealed book for fifteen years, with the old boiler-iron bosom, with no port holes. Occasionally a man's heart aches, and if he could put a hand on it, without going around the back way and sneaking in under the arm, he could tell by the feeling whether it was unrequited affection that ailed him or rheumatism. With the new shirt an exploring expedition can be sent to the seat of the disease before it is everlastingly too late.

Men have been wounded, and before they could be turned over and the entrance to the shirt found they have bled to death. The old back-action shirt is a fraud, and the new one is a daisy. It may be said by some that the new open sesame shirt will show to the world the color of the undershirt. It might if one was going to use his shirt bosom for a pillow, but few do that. And, even if they did, that is the only way the world can know that a man wears a silk undershirt, with a monogram on the front. We hail the new open-winter shirt with delight, and are sure the public will when they once get their hand in.—Peck's Sun.

The Indians.

The manner in which the Indians in some portions of the West are being treated is hardly credible. It is certainly not surpassed by the barbarity which the conquerers of ancient times were wont to show to a weak and disable foe. To the rascality of Indian bureau's and Indian officials is due in no little many of the disturbances and massacres which are so frequently occuring on our frontier; and though we have a standing army for its protection, yet the troops never seem to be at the right place, when they are most needed. A despatch from Gen. Pope to Gen. Sheridan, dated Fort Leavenworth, May 18th. will illustrate the cruelty with which the poor red man is being treated:

"The situation at Mescalero Agency much the same, only worse than it was with Cheyennes. The Mescaleros must be fed or they will starve. The Indian Bureau, as appears, can't feed them. The army must therefore feed them or a heavy military force must be placed around them to make them starve peaceably. There is time yet to provide for them, but it cannot safely be postponed. It should be attended to at once."

Under date of the Mescalero Agency, May 15, Agent Llewellyn has sent the following to Inspector Howard of the Indian Office: "Telegraph me at once if it is true that Congress has made no appropriation for subsistence of these Indians. Beef and flour will last until July 1. I have private arrangements to make, and want my family away from here by July 1. You know neither I nor any other agent can control these Indians on empty stomachs."

IRELAND.

Since Mr. Parnell's release from Kilmainham jail, he has been interviewed as to the condition of his constituency. Seven thousand persons, he says, have been evicted for the first quarter of this year, without being readmitted as tenants; that many were liable for arrears to the extent of from three to fifteen years, and that as time went on, if no settlement of the arrears question took place they would literally be turned out in thousands during the winter. The Land League has done its best to relieve the poor evicted tenants, but have found it impossible to do anything for more than even a tithe of them, the remainder being left on the road side or having to go into the work house. And right in the footsteps of all this suffering comes the unfortunate and dreadful occurrence in Phoenix Park—the assassination of Secretary Cavendish and under Secretary Burke, and now follows a new coersion act, still further restricting the liberties of the Irish tenantry. Verily the sons of the "bonny green isle" have much to lament.

Giteau's Exceptions Overruled.

The court en banc, on Monday affirmed the judgment of the lower court in the Giteau case, and denied the right of the prisoner to a new trial. The plea of Mr. Roed, counsel for Guiteau, was, that a court in the District of Columbia had no jurisdiction in the case. He held that the prisoner should have been tried not at the point where the fatal blow was given, but at the point where the deed was completed by the death of the victim. The laws of twenty-six States provide for trial at either point, but there is no such law in the District of Columbia. Little attention was, however, paid to the plea, and the hanging of Guiteau, on the 30th proximo, will, for a time at least, put an end to the tremendous amount of wrangling which his singular case has caused.

Hon. A. C. Hargrove.

The many ardent friends of Hon. A. C. Hargrove, will present his name before the Democratic and Conservative Convention of the State of Alabama, for Governor of the State. They will do this with the kindliest feelings towards all others; being impelled to this course of action by a knowledge that the man they present, is in every way worthy of the high honor which they ask for him, and that his administration of affairs will give satisfaction to the people of Alabama.

He is honest. He is capable. With the utmost respect and esteem for the honorable gentlemen, presented elsewhere, we can truly say, that Colonel Hargrove is intimately acquainted with the whole working of our Government. That he has in the last six years been a diligent student and an active participant in the management of all the difficult questions which have been so ably and happily adjusted.

The nomination of a man who has the characteristics of Col. Hargrove, will harmonize every part of the Democracy, and we will present to our opponents a united, solid front, with an invincible leader, and gain a victory which will bring blessings to all.

Then, fellow citizens of Alabama, join us in nominating a son of Alabama, who is worthy of the office and the highest honors of the State.—Tuskaloosa Times.

MOBILE, ALA., June, 1873.

EDITOR OF THE ——,
Tuskaloosa, Ala.,

SIR—While passing by a notorious negro bar-room the other night, I saw a stout, fine-looking white man and a highly colored negro come out just in front of me. Being an entire stranger here, I did not know the parties. As the former passed a lamp-post, by the light I saw something drop to the pavement, apparently from his pocket. I was a few yards behind, and picked up what proved to be the original of the following singular letter. The original was so badly charred that it was with the greatest difficulty, aided by chemicals, I could decipher it. Evidently, it has passed through a fiery ordeal en route from the great fixed gulf that separated Dives from Lazaras, to this Gulf City. The date of the infernal missive is somewhat old, from the fact propably that it came by way of your celebrated A. & C. railroad:

SOUTH SIDE OF RIVER STYX,
May, 1873. Thermometer 100000,-000,000,000 degs. below zero.

Hon. A—— M——,
Mobile, U. S. of America,
via Ala. & Chatt. Railroad,

Dear A——: You will remember that I was somewhat suddenly snatched out of the flesh, in Selma, on the ——, but I forget the date, though it seems to me that I have been down here, almost as long as the venerable Judas Iscariott, with whom I have become intimately acquainted, as we are placed in the same pit every night, after the day's work in stirring the fires in the great furnace. This place is piping hot—hotter than it has ever been represented to be by any preacher on earth. Those big, horn-fisted niggers of Selma hurt me when they laid me out, and I'll lay for them when they come down here, sure. His Satanic Majesty, who has taken a particular fancy to me, promises that he'll have the ungrateful rascals cast into the hottest bottomless pit that he's got. Don't you drink any more bad whiskey, for the statistics down here show that the large majority of our party come to the d—l, prematurely, by a too free indulgence in "pop-skull," with niggers. Josh Morse and a hundred other loil men of Alabama, are here now. Everything here is at white-heat, and it takes less than two seconds to burn the blackest darky's skin white as a piece of iron twelve hours in the most powerful furnace in your world. The hair was all scorched off my head the instant that old Charon's boat touched this shore. All the letters on my person, that were given me by Republican friends before I left Selma, were burnt to cinders at the same time; but I found plenty of old friends here who introduced me around. Poor John C. and Andy A. asked me about you. Here I find that perfect social equality for which our party is working so hard for now amongst the vile secesh of the Southern States. By the way, I wonder where all the rebels are. There is not one down here. It can't be possible that those traitors have gone in the opposite direction. The Governor here doesn't know where they all are, but thinks that maybe they have been sent to a hotter place even than this; though no such place is down on Gray's Atlas of these regions; evidently a very serious mistake made by Gray.

I tried to play J. C. Stanton on old man Charon, by offering him a bribe to leave me on the north or cool side of this river, but he indignantly asserted that he had been a faithful ferryman on the Styx for millions of years—as far back indeed, as the time when Satan fled from heaven and crossed in his boat. He also insultingly stated that he had never been a member of the Congress of the United States, nor of the Alabama Legislature, and was, therefore, incorruptible comparatively speaking. I'm being promoted, by degrees, and have been lately appointed to the glowing place of chief-fireman, in old brother John Brown's squad. I wear brass sandals now, because my leather shoes curled up with the heat. I'm getting more used to the peculiar climate, however, and strange to say, find it sorter genial. Josh M., who had such a fine suit of hair before he came, looks mighty queer about the head now, for it's all scorched off. Oakes Ames got here the other day and started, successfully, a Credit Mobilier job. Tell our friends, G. and E. that I've arranged for them when they come, to work in the same furnace, and to sleep together in the same soft bed of molten lead. The colored folks seem to get along better than us, for they get used to the climate quickest.

Say to Nap. Cloud, that there's a vacancy here in the office of Superintendent of Conflagration, which at my suggestion, the Governor will not fill till he comes. I want to tell you confidentially, that your name will come next on the slate, and after yours comes the name of that colored man who used to drink with you at the nigger bar-room in Montgomery.—You'd better drink all you can now, for there isn't any liquor here but smelted brim stone, and you can't smuggle none as you're searched. Uncle Thad. Stevens tells me that I've got to be kiln-dried before I'm thoroughly acclimated. I don't know what that means, but am afraid its awful. The aristocracy down here spend most of their time fanning themselves, and those who can't afford fans get in front of the mouth of the big bellows.

Your weeping, wailing and teeth-knashing friend,
E—— N——.

Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad.

It is with a feeling of gratulation and pride that we announce to the people of Lawrence county, that the building of the Warrior and Tennessee rivers railroad has been determined on, and the company have resolved to push the work through to completion at as early a day as possible. This road is to start from some point on the Memphis and Charleston road, running through Moulton, thence in a southerly direction through Winston, Walker and Tuscaloosa counties, and connecting with Selma, on the Alabama river, in Dallas county. The starting point on the M. and C. road cannot be located until the engineer shall have ascertained the best route up the mountain into the Moulton valley.

Railroad Accident.

From an extract published elsewhere, taken from the Birmingham Observer, it will be learned that the engineer, Mr. Thomas Sweeney, who was so badly scalded on last Friday afternoon, by the turning over of his engine near Verbena, died on Saturday afternoon at 6 o'clock. It seems that the run off was caused by the section hands using a blue instead of a red flag as a danger signal, in order to stop the train, as the road was undergoing repairs at the point, and was not in a condition for the train to pass. Mr. Sweeney was the only person hurt. Several persons from Clanton were on the train at the time.

Calera News.

Crops are looking fine in this section, though some complaint of damage to cotton by the late cold spell.

The Breazeale hotel will be completed this week, and the Calera House is being put in a first class condition. Both will do well as many people will spend the summer in Calera.

Wesley Lyndsey, colored, was caught between two freight cars last Sunday night and crushed to death.

The Northeastern part of Chilton county is full of mineral, marble, roofing slate, mica and other valuables, that will some day make it rich.

"Gewher" the Calera correspondent of the Shelby Sentinel and Col. W., of Montevallo, have had something to say in the columns of the Sentinel about the tariff. Now we would advise these gentlemen to keep quiet as the subject can only be discussed properly by the political economist.

You ought to see H. C. Moss sailing around in his new buggy.

There is as yet no avowed candidate for Legislative honors before the people of Shelby county. Graham, of the Sentinel, will probably get the nomination of the Convention, though Col. Walker, of Montevallo, and Col. Creswell, of Harpersville, have many friends that will support them. If a prohibitionist is nominated, the canvass will be a lively one, as the whiskey men will unite with the Independents and Republicans.

RUFUS.

Death from Scalding.

Thos. Sweeney, freight engineer, of this place, was badly scalded, Friday, by the turning over of his engine near Verbena, on the South and North Road. The train was approaching a point where station-hands were at work on the road and on account of the careless substitution of a blue flag for a red one, the train keeping on, ran over a spot where the track had been taken up, when the locomotive jumped the track and turned over. The fireman jumped out soon enough to save himself, but Sweeney was badly scalded from waist to head. He lay all day yesterday, at his home here, suffering terribly, when death at 6 o'clock, p. m., relieved him of his pains.

Birmingham Sunday Observer.

A Lady's Toast of Men.

At a literary meeting Mrs. Duniway toasted men as follows: "God bless 'em. We halve their joys, double their sorrows, treble their expenses, quadruble their cares, contest their property and out maneuver them in every way. This would be a very dreary world without men. In fact, I may say without fear of contradiction, without 'em, it would not be much of a world anyhow. We love 'em and the dear beings can't help it; we control 'em and the precious fellows don't know it. As husbands they are always convenient, but not always on hand; as beaux, they are by no means matchless. They are most agreeable visitors; they are handy at State fairs, and indespensable at oyster saloons. They are splendid as escorts for some other fellow's wife or sister; and, as friends, they are better than women. As our fathers they are inexpressibly grand. A man may be a failure in business, a wreck in constitution, not enough to boast of as beauty, nothing as a legislator for woman's rights, and not even very brilliant as a member of the press, but if he is our own father, we overlook his short-comings, and cover his peccadilloes with the divine mantle of charity. Then, as our husbands, how we love to parade them as paragons! And in the language of the inspired poet:

"We'll lie for them,
We'll cry for them,
And if we could we'd fly for them,
We'd do anything but die for them."

While a woman was kneeling in prayer at a church in Wilmington, N. C., another woman picked her pocket, and after prayers left the church.

Guiteau Demands an Unconditional Pardon.

WASHINGTON, May 19,—Guiteau thus writes to the Star: "I tell the American people and its officials, from the Executive down to the court in banc, now reviewing my case, that I tell the truth, and lie not, when I say I am God's man in the matter of President Garfield's removal, and that, if a hair of my head is harmed, the almighty will make the officials that do it pay well for it. If I was outside, I would lecture under the auspices of some bureau on religious subjects. One of my subjects would be: 'Paul, the Apostle,' and kindred topics. If my time has come to leave this world, I am willing; but I want the officials that murder me on the gallows to understand the issue—if they murder me they will incur the wrath of Almighty God, and it will be a long time before he lets up on them and this nation. The devils that crucified the despised Galilean thought they were doing God's service, but that did not release them from liability. They and their nation incurred the wrath of the Almighty by that act, and he got even with them at the destruction of Jerusalem, and He will get even with this nation and with the officials if I am murdered on the gallows. I want an unconditional pardon or nothing, and I want the Executive to so understand it. I have set forth my views fully on this in my book, 'The Truth and the Removal.' If honorable jurists representing the Washington court in banc decide this case according to law, there is only one decision they can make and that is that they have no jurisdiction. If they decide contrary to law, the matter will rest with President Arthur, and they will have incurred the wrath of Almighty God."

The Hon. Mr. James.

CAIRO, May 18.—A conductor on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad today reports having seen Frank James at the breakfast table at Rives' station yesterday morning en route from a station below St. Louis to Mobile. He was recognized and accosted by a gentleman from Edgefield, Ky., who knew the family intimately.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat Special.

We desire to say that the editor who heretofore has commented on the unfortunate fate of Col. Jesse James is at present absent from the city. He is not expected back until the Hon. Frank James leaves Mobile.—Register.

TradeMark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

THE AUTHOR OF "A FOOL'S ERRAND" ON TOO-TOOISM.

I am not entirely given over to tootooism. I always associate an esthetic with laziness, and a lazy man doesn't know what rest means. I am glad I am away from the ladies, but really I don't admire a Queen Anne chair. I know it is high art, but just think of one hundred and odd pounds of muscular Christianity resting in a spindle-shanked Queen Anne chair. Then again I can't say I am in love with those new chandeliers made in imitation of a tallow-dip, with a gutter of smut running down the sides. Then there are those narrow-necked jars in a Japanese cabinet, so frail that one is afraid of enjoying a hearty laugh for fear of breaking up $100 worth of high art. Do you know I enjoy seeing a man lying with his feet on the sofa? I know it's rough on the sofa, but it's the best thing for the man. I often wonder when I get into a parlor filled with all the jim-cracks of estheticism, what it was all for. I like a parlor where the children can turn somersaults without fear of what is coming after. High art! Somebody told me that the cover of Scribner's Monthly was a specimen of it. I remarked I couldn't make out just which way the snake was going. He was inclined to be offended, but all I could imagine of the design was a reminder of a snake crawling backward or forward, or, perhaps, a dish of vermicelli soup on a piece of brown paper.

The boy that quits his public school or his college ought to be induced, or flogged, if need be, to prevent him from entering at once upon a business life. Let him spend his time on a farm. I don't know how it is, but in every place I've been true American labor was dying out. I went into a prayer meeting in Maine the other day (they go to prayer meeting in Maine yet), and they were singing: "There Is Rest for the Weary," and, American-like, they have placed that haven of rest "beyond the Jordan." Nations have passed off the face of the earth by disregarding lesser laws than that of American restlessness.—Judge Tourgee's Lecture on Rest.

AN ANECDOTE OF MALIBRAN.

The incidents of Malibran's later life are so well known to all who take an interest in musical affairs that any particular recounting of them would be superfluous here, even irrespective of the limits and the purpose of these articles. There is one story of her, however, which does not appear in her memoirs, and I believe has never been in print. When she was singing at Covent Garden Theater, in London, the tenor was Templeton, a Scotchman with a beautiful voice and fair vocalization, but dull, without style or expression, and a mere split-stick upon the stage. All at once Malibran declared she would not sing with Templeton. The manager, supposing that she objected to him as an artist, and knowing her kindness and good nature, asked her the reason of her decision. After a little hesitation she replied, "Last evening Mr. Templeton was going to kiss me." The manager, who knew Mr. Templeton as well as he knew Malibran, sent for the tenor immediately, and, in the presence of the haughtily-shrinking prima donna, told him of her accusation. "Modum Molly Brawn," was the stolid Scotchman's reply—"Modum Molly Brawn, I wadna kuss ye on ony accoont." "Molly Brawn," who was then pestered by a gilded throng made up of half the male butterflies in London, appreciated the situation instantly, broke into a peal of laughter, and matters were restored to their former condition.—Richard Grant White, in the Century.

WHERE THEY HAD HIM.

About twenty years ago certain localities in Michigan were frightened half to death about small-pox, and several towns had stringent regulations regarding vaccination. In one village in Macomb county the duty of bringing in delinquents was intrusted to a constable named Simmonds. He worked with great energy, and at last he had everybody in except an old chap named Williams, who sternly refused to come forward. The constable laid for him, however, brought him a prisoner to the doctor's office, and ordered him to "peel" his arm and make ready. It was then discovered that he had once wrestled with small-pox, and, of course, vaccination was not necessary. The constable was all broke up for a minute and Williams was chuckling with satisfaction, when the officer suddenly asked:

"Have you ever had the measles?"

"Yes."

"Mumps?"

"Yes."

"Chicken-pox?"

"Yes."

"Well, I've had a week's trouble to get hold of you, and I'll be hanged if you are going to beat me this way! You haven't had the cholera and I know it, and we don't propose to have this town devastated by grim death this summer. Doctor, I'll hold him down and you vaccinate him for the cholera!"

A matter of choice—whether to suffer, uninterruptedly with a cough or to invest 25 cents for Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup and cure it.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

Pickled Raisins.—Leave two pounds of large, fine raisins on the stems, add one pint of vinegar and half a pound of sugar; simmer over a slow fire half an an hour.

Butter.—Take a new flower pot, wash it clean, wrap in a wet cloth and set over butter, will keep it as hard as if set on ice. Milk, if put into an earthen can, or in a tin one, will keep for a long time, if well wrapped in a wet cloth.

Apple Jelly.—Pare and stew sour, juicy apples (greenings are nice) in enough water to cover them, strain as directed for currant jelly, allow a pound of sugar for each pound of juice, put them together and strain, boil four or five minutes, skimming it thoroughly.

Partridges.—Take three young partridges, place them on a spit before the fire, and roast them fifteen to twenty minutes; send them to table with bread crumbs browned in the oven, with a small piece of butter added round them, and send in a tureen some rich brown gravy.

Tomatoes.—To keep ripe tomatoes all winter, select fine sound tomatoes, wipe them perfectly dry and place them very carefully in a stone jar two-thirds full. Fill the jar quite up with good lard and cover closely. When wanted for use, take them out from under the lard and wash them in hot water.

Baked Beets.—These excellent vegetables are quite as good baked as boiled, and the sugar is better developed by the baking process. The oven should not be too hot, and the beets must be frequently turned. Do not peel them until they are cooked, then serve with butter, pepper and salt.

Banana and Apple Tart.—Make crust of fine flour and fresh butter. Make little crust, but make it good. Slice apples fine, and put in dish with three or four bananas sliced, only adding sugar and perhaps a little sirup, if you have got it. Cover crust over fruit; brush a little melted butter over top; strew white sugar on, and bake twenty minutes or more, as required.

Canned Peaches.—When canning peaches one cannot guess at just the number of halves or quarters needed to fill the can, and so often after filling the can several pieces are left in the sirup; and if you add others and cook them over again they will drop in pieces. My way to avoid this is to take out the pieces carefully on a plate, cook the others, and, when they are needed to help fill another can, drop them for a minute or two into the sirup.

LOVE UNDER PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES.

When the French sought to establish a monarchy in Mexico a Mazatlan youth raised a regiment of boys and waged against such of the invaders as appeared in Sinaloa a warfare that told. The young man's father was of Castilian blood and his mother was a Mexican. His name, Corona, soon became famous, and at the age of 25 he was regarded as the Mosby of Mexico. At the end of the war he was a Major General, the hero of the soldiers and the idol of Mazatlan society. He was six feet tall, broad shouldered, handsome and daring. While attending a ball at the American Hotel, at Mazatlan, he stumbled over a domestic, knocking a tray from her hand. Stooping to pick up the crockery, Gen. Corona noticed that the girl was very pretty and very saucy. She told him that her name was Betty Bowman, that her mother was a San Francisco washerwoman and that he ought to know better than to rush headlong down a dark stairway. Corona made love to the American miss and before leaving for the capital he had learned of her irreproachable though very humble life. Once away, Betty's face and pert ways haunted him so much that he wrote to her arranging for marriage by proxy. He remained in Mazatlan; the bride went to a convent school. They were a thousand miles apart and wrote to each other daily, the husband constantly instructing the wife in polite ways. President Juarez, fearing that Corona's popularity would lead the people to give their vote to the young soldier at an election then approaching, concluded to send him as Minister to Madrid, the most enviable diplomatic position in the eyes of all Mexicans. Gen. Corona took the washerwoman's daughter to his palace in Madrid and she is now regarded as the most brilliant and accomplished lady at the court of Spain.

The Baroness Rothschild, having invited a public singer to dinner, asked her afterward to try the piano. It gave forth no sound, whereupon the Baroness told her that she had had the wires unstrung, in proof that she invited the prima donna only for the pleasure of her society. Ordinary people would have accomplished the same thing by not saying anything about it, or by locking the piano or having it removed to another room.

The Western way of removing a county seat is the surest way. A keg of gunpowder under the Court House does the removing part in about three skips.

SHOWERS OF FISHES IN RAIN.

During the rains of 1864, I was residing at Arrah, in a large house with a flat roof, and during a heavy shower the cry was raised by my servants that fish were falling from heaven. I rushed out and found the compound (courtyard) strewn with small dead fish, from two to three inches in length; while from the roof two or three bucketfuls were procured. Whence came the fish? Undoubtedly from the sky; but how they got there I am not prepared to state, unless they may have been carried into the air from their native element by a water-spout. Arrah is situated in the corner where the Sone enters the Ganges, and is about seven miles from either river—the only possible source of the fish. The second fall occurred four years after at Patna, which is about one or two miles from the Ganges, and also during the rains. On starting on my rounds one morning, I drove over a bridge, crossing a then-dry water-course. During my absence a heavy rain fell, and on my returning home I found the water-course full and a crowd of natives shoveling out quantities of the same small fish, all dead. Another curious fact relating to fishes. On one occasion, while stationed at Arrah, I came across a specimen of the climbing perch (Anabas scandens) struggling along the road at least half a mile from the Sone, to which I had it transferred, alive and vigorous. It may have embarked on that strange journey to spawn leaving its eggs in a road-side ditch; but then a difficulty arises in its being alone.—Chambers' Journal.

THE DOCTOR AND THE LAWYER.

A smart young sprig of a lawyer had a grave old doctor on the witness stand in a case of assault and battery, and he questioned him unmercifully.

"Ah, Doctor," inquired the lawyer, "did I understand you to say the cut in the man's head was dangerous?"

"Yes, sir," replied the doctor.

"Well, Doctor, doesn't it sometimes happen that even a less cut than this is dangerous?"

"Yes, sir."

"And, Doctor, is it not true that even a scratch is dangerous?"

"Yes, sir, and I have known of cases resulting fatally when not even a scratch was visible. Only recently a man died under such circumstances."

"Ah, indeed," quickly put in the attorney in a pleased and satisfied way, "will you be kind enough to tell the jury the facts?"

"Certainly, if you desire it."

"You say there was not a scratch on him?"

"Not one that I could find."

"And he died?"

"Yes."

"Now, doctor, just tell the jury how it was."

"Well, you see, he had the colic, and he was dead before I could get him untangled."

The young attorney called another witness.—Steubenville (Ohio) Herald.

Capt. W. P. Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.:
Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chronic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the Liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of the bowels disappeard, and a comforable state of health was soon established. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,
D. S. MALONE

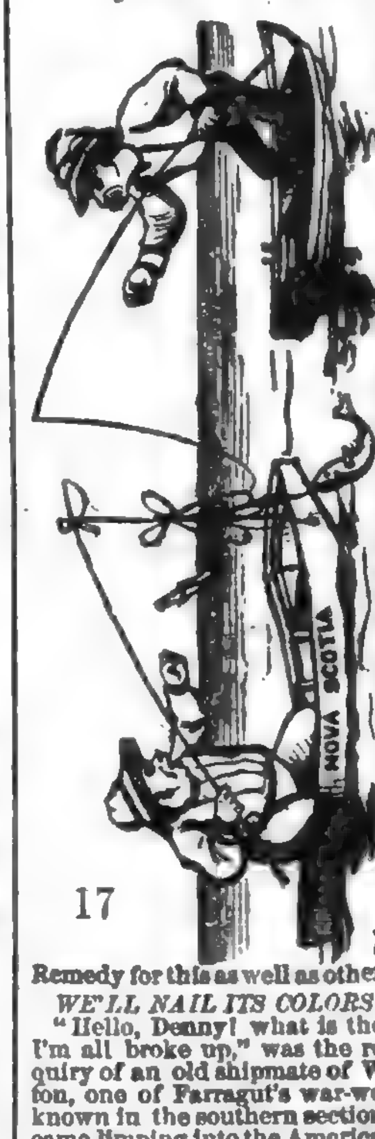
ALWAYS KEEP COOL.



To stick to your subject and the truth is an excellent plan, and whether it be in questions of finance or fishing, or any topic whatever, civil or political, always keep cool and tell the truth. However, there is a certain margin allowed for lying, when it comes to fishing, that is permitted in no other subject, and no doubt our friends in the picture are indulging in that special employment, as well, perhaps, as in a little scientific swearing. Their bodies and tempers are hot and the air is cool (as they should be, but are not,) and they are apparently in the condition when it is much easier to catch rheumatism than fish, in which case it would be well for them that they be provided with a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy for this as well as other painful ailments.

WE'LL NAIL ITS COLORS TO THE MAST.
"Hello, Denny! what is the trouble?" "Oh, I'm all broke up," was the response to the inquiry of an old shipmate of William G. Denniston, one of Farragut's war-worn veterans, well known in the southern section of this city, who came limping into the American office yesterday. "I thought I would go under the hatches this time," continued Denniston. "I never suffered so much in my life. I had the rheumatic gout so bad that I could not get off the bed or put my foot to the floor, and would have been there yet if a friend had not recommended St. Jacobs Oil to me. I hesitated some time before getting a bottle, thinking it was another one of those advertised nostrums, but was finally induced to give it a trial, and a lucky day it was for me. Why, bless my stars! after bathing the limb thoroughly with the Oil I felt relief, and my faith was pinned to St. Jacob and his Oil after that. I freely say that if it had not been for St. Jacobs Oil I should, in all probability, be still housed. My foot pains me but little, and the swelling has entirely passed away. It beats anything of the kind I have ever heard of, and any person who doubts it send them to me at 1924 South Tenth st.—Philadelphia Times.

THE HAUNTED WELL.

[illegible] the old- [illegible] about [illegible] the primeval [illegible] of farming land [illegible] ful shade, and the [illegible] upon the place is my [illegible] ent well with the [illegible] sweep, but no one ever [illegible] there, though it is as [illegible] crystal.

[illegible] the place is worth a great [illegible] was valued £1,500 when I [illegible] years ago. The house is a [illegible]; the sort of a place [illegible] from business [illegible] his days in, and city [illegible] to see it and the grounds, [illegible] to be delighted. Now, [illegible] you that I came into Old- [illegible] exactly [illegible] pounds in my [illegible] that I had no idea what I [illegible] when that was spent, you will [illegible] rised that, six months after, I [illegible] place. But I'll tell you all [illegible]. It was what folks call a [illegible] place, and for ten years it had [illegible]. People tried to live there, [illegible] always frightened away. If [illegible] ly been the house, that could [illegible] n torn down; but nobody would [illegible] the land on shares.

[illegible] years before this, the proprie- [illegible] a jealous old gentleman, [illegible] a young wife whom he would [illegible] permit out of his sight, if he could [illegible].

[illegible] ver, she was as sly as he was [illegible] she managed to flirt suf- [illegible] self talked about. [illegible] very pretty, she set one or two [illegible] wild about her, and [illegible] to follow her around, making [illegible] and acting desperately like [illegible] a play.

[illegible] said that he wrote to [illegible] I suppose he did. And at last [illegible] was spread through the place that [illegible] run away with him.

[illegible] was gone, and she was gone; and [illegible] old man came one morning to Lawyer Tantivy, and sold his property at a [illegible] to a man who had wanted it [illegible]—a rich man, who liked to have [illegible] that he owned the finest place in town.

It was plain that the poor old gentleman [illegible] not care what became of him, and when he had got the money he wandered away, and was never seen [illegible].

The new proprietor moved up to the great house in state, but at dawn the whole family—servants and all—returned to their old quarters.

What they had seen, or what they had not seen, it was hard to tell, but they were all nearly frightened to death. The doctor was sent for for the ladies, and they spoke of the most awful apparitions.

After this the head of the family and the constable spent a day and a night there. They held their tongues, but those who saw them first knew that they had been well frightened, and the man put the place into the market at once.

Lawyer Tantivy privately told people that only a coward would have been frightened by rats in an old wall, and he sold it to a city man. Much the same thing happened; but this time the house was not sold again. The city man went elsewhere, and tried in vain to get rid of his bargain. It was let for the summer once, but the people did not stay a week. After a while nobody would farm the ground.

Some said they saw a woman with her throat cut. Some that they saw a man with a wound in his breast. Some both. Voices were heard; hands were felt; and there, when I came to the place, the old house stood, with moths and spiders for its only tenants.

I went up and looked at it, and then I talked to Jane. She had not a bit of superstition in her, and she agreed to what I proposed.

I went to old Tantivy and offered him £25 a year for a four years' lease of the place, the £100 to be paid in one lump.

"After that," said I, "I'll give you four hundred for the property. Wife and I are not afraid of ghosts."

The old lawyer shook his head.

"You say you've met with [illegible], friend," said he, "and have just £120 left. Keep it. You couldn't live in that house one week. I've tried it. I'd make a bargain with a rich man, but I'm not rascal enough to take a poor man's all."

"I'll risk it," said I. "I do it freely, but the papers must be made out fair and square—four hundred after my four years' lease."

And so I had my way. Jane and I went up to the house one day; I had £19 in my pocket, and a wheelbarrow full of groceries. She carried a broom and a new scrubbing-brush. It was a wonderful, grand, dirty old place. We set to work to clean it—to drive out the insects and the rats; and we got some fresh straw to sleep on, for the beds were all moldering away. That nigh at 9 we lay down with a lamp burning, and went to sleep like two tops; and I think it must have been 12 o'clock, or nigh to it, when Jane shook me violently. I started up, and, holding each other's hands, we both saw what had frightened her.

A man stood near the bed, a young man, with fair hair curling about his temples; his breast was bare, and we saw a great bleeding wound there. I had my pistol under my pillow, and I drew it out and looked at him.

"Go, or I fire," I said; "I'm not a fool to be tricked in this way."

Instead of obeying he slowly moved toward the bed. Jane shrieked and drew the counterpane over her head. I covered him with the pistol.

"One step more and I fire," I said.

He took the step. I fired. A shriek of laughter followed, and there was no one there. I arose and searched the place. Every window was barred, every door locked. I unlocked one of the doors, and entered the adjoining room. A great bed, with tester and canopy, stood there, and upon this lay the figure of a woman, all in white, covered with blood. I rushed toward it, lamp in hand. Again those hollow shrieks of laughter, and nothing but the stained and yellow ticking of an old feather-bed lay under the canopy.

"Silas! Silas!" screamed my wife, who had followed me, clinging to my arm. "It is all true. Let us leave the place."

"Jane," said I, "it seems to be true that this place is haunted, but we have risked our all on it. The things we have seen have not hurt us, and I propose to drive them away. I'll take you to the village, if you like, and leave you there to board, but here I stay until I beat these ghosts."

"Not alone," said Jane. And she did not leave me.

If you believe me, friend, day and night for three weeks we were haunted as people never were before—faces, voices, hands—in the house and in the field; and, worse than all, we grew sick.

I sent for the doctor, who wouldn't come; and we went to him.

"You are poisoned," he said. "What have you eaten, or what have you been drinking?"

We thought it over, and I told him that we knew of nothing harmful, and that we cooked and prepared all our own food.

"I never knew any one to pass a day at that confounded house you live in without being affected in this way," said he; "even those who did not eat there. Constable Collins says he touched nothing but cold water, and he came near dying."

"It's the well, then," said I.

"They used to call it the best well in the county," said the doctor.

"It has a nasty taste now," said I. "I'll beg of my neighbors until I've cleaned it out."

And that day I began. We got better slowly, and I tried to hire two farm hands to help me with my well. Not one would be hired. I was weak from sickness, and to tell the truth, it seemed as if the old boy himself was in the place. I was almost tired of living as I did, and, feeling like a maniac, and one day I went down to the well, and sat there, wondering whether it might not be best to give up and go somewhere, as farm laborer, when I felt what seemed to be an icy hand on my head, and, looking up, saw my two ghosts, side by side. They were horrible enough, I can tell you, and they looked at me and pointed into the well; and then I heard two voices crying:

"Get us out! Get us out! Get us out and bury us! The water is cold, and our wounds are deep. Get us out."

And then the truth came to me, Heaven knows how.

I went over to my neighbor's house, just able to crawl there, and I said to him:

"Mr. Jarvis, will you send one of your men to the people they ought to go to, and have the police go to my place? There's something in my well that ought not to be there."

Well, they came, and I was right. They took out of that well two bodies rolled up in sheet lead. By bits of jewelry, and things of that sort, they found that they were the bodies of the [illegible] wife of the old proprietor and the [illegible] man who used to run after her. The [illegible] had killed them both, but he must have had help to bury them in their leaden coffins. And now people began to remember how two roofers, who had a good deal of this sheet lead on hand, grew suddenly well off, and went from the place about the time the old man sold the estate, and they believed that he had paid them for helping him to dispose of the bodies.

They buried them in the graveyard, and Jane and I never saw the ghosts again. The farm-land and summer boarders brought me the price I had agreed upon for the place, and I've been a prosperous man ever since. And if you want any one to tell you a good, genuine ghost story, come to me.

THE PYRAMIDS.

Mr. G. W. French, of Philadelphia, presented some curious facts concerning the results of the astronomical and geometrical investigations of the great Pyramid before a meeting of New York ministers. The chief purpose of the speaker was to prove that the Pyramid records the prophetic history of Judaism and Christianity. The Pyramid was built before idolatry made its way into the world, and, as was claimed, contains no symbol of false worship, and this confirmed the Scriptural knowledge of God held by Abimelech, King of Gesar, and of the Egyptian Pharaoh in the time of Abraham. According to Mr. French, the narrow passageway in the Pyramid symbolizes the voyage of life, which slopes downward to a dark hole beneath the earth's surface and upward to the "King's chamber," where the temperature stands unchangeably at 68 degrees. The horizontal passage symbolizes the departure of the Jews from Egypt and also their rejection of the Christ. Then the perpendicular ascent, the overhanging wall, and a particular step in the pyramidal sign language mean that the higher a man rises toward the divine and the heavenly the more room there is for him, though the ascent may be difficult. The inscription on the Pyramid was taken by the lecturer to mean the unity of God and the fulfillment of certain prophecies in 1881, and in view of the events of last year he thought these symbols of the Pyramid were something more than mere coincidence. The prophecies of Daniel concerning the destruction of Jerusalem in seventy weeks and the 2,300 days were said to bring out 1881, and also the Apocalyptic vision of 1260 from the Mohammedan hegira in 621 give the same date. But the Pyramid shows a plus 1881, which includes part of the current year, so that great religious events may be looked for in this year of grace 1882. A symbol of the Messiah was also found in the capstone, as "the head of the corner." These theories of the symbolism of the Pyramid have often been discussed before, and they are very interesting, but general opinion, we believe, has concluded that they are simply an ingenious leading up of certain facts and figures to fit preconceived and already accepted ideas.

THERE had been a seeming coolness between the lovers. One day Emily's schoolmate ventured to refer to the subject, and asked her: "When did you see Charley last?" "Two weeks ago to-night." "What was he doing?" "Trying to get over the fence." "Did he appear to be much agitated?" "So much so," replied Emily, "that it took all the strength of papa's new bulldog to hold him."

VERA CRUZ.

The city itself, compact and solid, with a line of domes and steeples blackened with time, roofs of substantial red tiles, plentiful balconies, and bits of wall tinted blue, green and pink, is like a little Venice. A large crane hangs out from the end of an iron pier, and the fancy hooks on to it at once—the terminus of the English railway which is to bear us away up the extraordinary slopes from the hot lands—the tierras calientes to the mysterious interior and the capital.

In an existence of going on 400 years, Vera Cruz has arrived at a population of 17,000. The interior view of the place does not belie the promise of the first glimpse. The churches are of irregular, picturesque shapes, with nice bells. The principal one, in a little shaded plaza, has a dome of colored mosaic tiles, which shine in the sun—a style we shall see plenty of farther on. The principal shops have a well-furnished air, especially in the branches of groceries and heavy hardware, and the Custom House square is stuffed to repletion with cotton bales, railroad iron and miscellaneous goods waiting transportation. The principal street is called De La Independencia, and leads to a short concrete promenade bordered with stone benches and palm trees. It is early discovered that the Mexican is very patriotic. He names his streets after his battles, as particularly the Cinco de Mayo, fought at Puebla against the French, and even has a way of joining the names of his heroes to those of cities. Thus Puebla is Puebla de Zaragoza, commandant in the same great battle of the 5th of May, and Oaxaca is Oaxaca of (President(Juarez.

Grass grows in the joints of the stones in the minor streets, and open gutters run in the center. One might be in some such Italian city as Mantua. The sopilotes, of which travelers have written, sit on long, straight waterspouts projecting from the houses. They are large, raven black, dignified, and, aloft there, against the deep-blue sky, have an appearance of carved architectural ornaments. There are street-cleaning departments elsewhere which are far less ornamental, at any rate. Notices of a bull fight for the coming Sunday are posted on the dead walls. A tram car of a peculiar pattern runs out to the open fields, where there is a dancing place and ball ground. There is a view, in passing, of the cemetery, which should be a leading institution at Vera Cruz; and yet, when one is on the ground, as is apt to be the case, there are mitigations to be found even of yellow fever. Pall bearers in gloomy weeds are naturally expected to form a considerable part of the population, just as murderers and kidnappers of all sorts are expected to abound elsewhere. But an American resident assured me that in four years he had known but one of our countrymen to die of the vomito, as it is called, and very few to have it. Its chief havoc is among the poor and badly nourished. The American Consul, himself a physician, and a resident of twelve years' standing, is strenuous in his views as to the harm done to the commercial interests of both countries by ignorance and misrepresentations on the subject. It is certain that the local authorities do not regard the disease as contagious, putting those afflicted side by side with surgical patients in the hospital; from which it seems that if the case were really looked into there may be as little need of the annoying quarantine against yellow fever, at least of this variety, as if it were simple ague.—W. H. Bishop, in Harper's Magazine.

HE SIGHED FOR HIS SIRE.

Some few years since a melodrama was played in a certain theater, the chief actor in which had made himself, from his haughty and overbearing conduct, disliked by one and all. In the last act he was supposed to visit the tombs of his ancestors. In the center of the stage, upon a marble pedestal, stood the statue of his father. A heavy fold of drapery covered the figure. Enter Albert. "Once again," he says, "to gaze upon those features which in life so often gazed on me with tenderest affection! Father, thy mourning son now comes to pay thee aderation. Let me remove the veil which from the vulgar gaze shields the beloved image of a once-dear parent." Off went the drapery, and behold! the father stood upon his head. The shouts of laughter that saluted this practical joke put an end to the scene, which changed to the next as quickly as possible, amid the bravos of the audience, the anger of the manager and the uncontrollable rage of the actor.

UNDER THE BED.

Times When It Has Concealed the Oft-Looked-For Burglar.

The man under the bed does not always prove a myth. Perhaps it is an actual fact that women who pray look for him more regularly than others of a less spiritual turn of mind; when the good woman kneels at the bedside to offer her devotions it is the most natural thing in the world for her to first explore that historic territory and satisfy herself that no concealed burglar is listening. It is also a well-authenticated fact that a pious woman in the suburbs of London did discover the legs of a bold, bad house-breaker sticking out just as began her petition. She did not shriek, but went on with a prayer for that particular sinner that would have melted the heart of a Newgate thief. I wish that it might be added that he was converted on the spot, came out and was pardoned, and afterward married the petitioner. But truth compels me to add that the good woman was interrupted in the most solemn part of her prayer by a peal of laughter from the graceless younger brother who had enacted the part of a burglar.

More tragic was the story of the lady who, traveling alone, stopped at an inn and mentioned the fact that she had been followed and watched by a villainous-looking man with a shock of red hair, who she feared had designs upon the valuables she carried with her. As nothing was seen of him at the inn, she retired for the night, carefully locked the door and was soon in bed, leaving a light burning in front of a mirror. No sooner was her head on the pillow than she had a distinct view of the man with the red hair crouching under the bed. She made no sound, but reached softly for a scarf she had laid near, made it into a running noose and waited. The next morning, when her servants broke open the door, they found the lady sitting up in bed, grasping with both hands the noose in which she held the fearful weight of the dead man; she had strangled him, but was herself a raving maniac from whom reason had forever gone.

Some time ago a prominent Judge in Birmingham, N. H., was found murdered in his own house, and no clew to the murderer. It was immediately after an adverse decision he had made in a case of great importance, and the murder was supposed to have been instigated by a desire for revenge, but as all the parties were respectable people it was impossible to fasten the guilt on any one. The Judge was a widower, and lived alone with the exception of a young daughter and the servants. This daughter was beautiful, and on the evening in question had returned home from a ball at a late hour and gone directly to her own room, where she stood before her mirror taking off her jewels. As she did so, she held her white and rounded arm above her head, and conscious of its beauty said aloud: "What a beautiful arm!" little thinking the remark of such consequence as it proved to be in the tragedy that followed. The girl both saw and heard her father's murderer, but as he was masked failed to distinguish his features, but always declared she should know his voice if she ever heard it. Several years passed, and in another city she was standing in a crowd observing some passing sight, when she was conscious of the curious regard of a stranger who stood near. Looking at her with a singular intensity, he made this remark: "Oh, the beautiful arm!" She knew the voice in an instant, and throwing herself bodily on the man denounced him as her father's murderer. He was arrested, tried and convicted, and told how he had lain hidden under the bed and heard the idle remark of the young girl which she herself had been scarcely conscious of. He had recognized her on meeting her, and involuntarily betrayed himself, as he had been a stranger and an unsuspected party.—Detroit Post.

ASUNDER: He escorted his sweetheart to the gallery one day, and had her picture taken. She selected the impression she liked best, and a few days afterward a dozen photos were sent home to her. When Charley called in the evening, he asked her how she was pleased with them. "Pretty well," she answered, "only they're so awfully pale; they don't show the color of my skin at all." "Oh, never mind about that," encouragingly added Charley; "I've got some yellow ochre home and will touch 'em up for you." Then a big gulf seemed to open between them, and it remains open yet.

Southern Emigration.

We publish below a circular letter lately received from the Southern Land, Emigration and Improvement Company, which has its headquarters in New York City, asking information in regard to our county, its people, climate, &c. We have sent them what information we have been able to gain, and we herewith publish the letter, in order that any persons having land to sell may write to them. The address of the Company is 75, 76 and 77 Temple Court, New York City.

New York, May 19, 1882.

To the Editor of the Chilton View:

Dear Sir — With the view of bringing to the notice of emigrants constantly arriving at this port in large numbers, the many and superior advantages offered by the South to persons of moderate means, this office would respectfully invite such information and data as may tend to attract settlers to your section.

The tide of emigration is now turning in a marked degree towards the South. It will fertilize the Southern States—rich in only partially developed resources—in the same way that it has conduced to the rapid, mighty growth of the West. It is only a question of time, which you have the power to hasten. Knowing the interest you must have in this great question, and the wide range of information thereon at your command, we take the liberty of asking you the following questions:

1. Are there any lands in your vicinity for sale?
2. What quantity and where located?
3. Are said lands cleared or wood land?
4. Do they contain minerals, if so, what kinds?
5. Is there water power, and to what extent?
6. Are there schools and churches (what denomination) adjacent?
7. How near to railroads constructed in course of construction, or contemplated?
8. What is the nature and attractiveness of your climate?
9. How will new settlers be received?

An early response to the above inquiries, together with any further information you may be pleased to give, will be highly appreciated by us.

Respectfully,
J. W. Maguire, Secretary.

The Office Seeks the Man.

We publish elsewhere, a letter from Hon. Thomas Williams, congressman from this district, written to the editor of the Tallapoosa Democrat. Mr. Williams has never been a candidate for the office which he holds, and this will go far toward again securing him the nomination. His is a rare case indeed.

Another thing to commend Mr. Williams to the people of the district, is, that he is the only practical farmer in the Alabama delegation. In a State where farming is so extensively engaged in, it is nothing but justice that competent representatives should be placed in the halls of legislation to protect the interests of agriculture, and to advocate laws for its advancement, and for the improvement of the condition of the farmer. We are not an advocate of any man's claims for the position, but in this case, where the man has never sought the office, and yet has filled it so commendably to himself and with such satisfaction to his constituents, we think it well that he should be returned.

Skillful Legislation.

The Sheriffs of Alabama are just now in some tribulation over a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the State, construing anew a law passed by the last Legislature in reference to the feeding of prisoners charged with criminal offenses during their term of incarceration while awaiting trial. A communication to the Huntsville Independent, published elsewhere, states clearly the whole difficulty. It is simply the result of an oversight on the part of experienced, wise and capable members of our legislature. The oversight is likely to cause the sheriffs of populous counties like this especial embarrassment. They are almost forced to expend several thousand dollars for the feed of prisoners, and run the risk of never getting it back, or else to resign. Unless a sheriff is a rich man, or has a fine credit to go into such a hotel business on his own account, he can not discharge the duties of his office. Furthermore if he has or can command the requisite means, he must have an unlimited confidence in the political complexion and philanthropic disposition of the next legislature in order to get his consent to go into such a business. What the present result will be can not be guessed. Possibly the State Auditor and Treasurer may have the nerve to run the risk of disobeying the law, and to come to the rescue of the helpless sheriffs. If they do not, the boards of commissioners of the various counties will be compelled to feed prisoners whom necessity or discretion may cause the Sheriff to leave to starve. The embarrassment results from awkwardly dovetailed laws, and is a most timely and convincing proof of the ineffectiveness of our legislators because of actual ignorance and experience. They do not know thoroughly what our laws are, and hence make great mistakes in changing or adding to them. Of course the present trouble will be remedied next winter, but in the meantime let the people everywhere learn a lesson from the occurrence. Select your representatives carefully, get men of fine common sense, discerning judgment and sterling character, rather than of brilliancy or popular bearing, and then keep them in office, train them, make them capable, useful, effective legislators. Then no such bungling as the case in hand will occur.—Selma Times.

Hon. Thomas Williams.

In an open letter to the editor of the Tallapoosa Democrat, Hon. Thomas Williams says, in answer to the question, whether or not he would "again be a candidate before the Congressional Convention:"—"I beg to assure you that I never have been, as your inquiry assumes, a candidate for nomination to the position I now hold. The honor comes to me unsought; and deeply grateful to the people for the honor thus conferred, I have endeavored, faithfully and honestly, and in that way seemed to me most discrete and beneficial to my people, to represent their interest. While I am not a candidate and will not consent to enter a scramble for the nomination; yet, if the people of the district deem it proper to nominate me, I will not be unmindful of such a recognition of my services—will accept their nomination, and if elected will endeavor to represent their true interest, with proper discretion, zeal and fidelity."

In Col. Williams' case, the office has in each instance sought the man, and he stands now as he did at first, "ready to serve the people should they desire his services."

Selma Times: Through the courtesy of Messrs. Garland and Winter, the managers of the Selma and Montgomery telegraph offices respectively, the Times and Advertiser telephones were connected yesterday, and conversation was carried on for several minutes. A new Western Union wire has just been arranged between the two cities, the sounds being much more distinct than we have before found them. They came as clearly and voices could be recognized as readily as in our exchange. The music of "Grandfather's Clock" on an organettee in the Advertiser office was so well heard that several persons at the Times telephone readily recognized the music as coming from that unique instrument.

Clark County Democrat: About the 4th or 5th inst., as W. alias "Shanghai" Walker, L. L. Hand, and Billy Mobley, the last colored, were taking a raft to Mobile, from the lower end of this county, Hand was murdered and thrown into the river while passing Twelve-Mile Island, according to Walker's statement. The raft was taken to Mobile and disposed of, and Walker and Mobley returned, giving different and conflicting stories as to what had become of the missing man. Walker brought back Hand's rifle, some groceries and other articles. Some of the citizens of the "Fork," whose suspicious were aroused as to the fate of Hand, wrote to Sheriff Peter Burke, of Mobile, in relation to the matter, giving a description of the strangely absent man. A few days before this the body of a man was found in the river, a short distance above Mobile, corresponding well with the given description of Hand, though horribly mutilated. His head was crushed in, and the back part of it cut off; his face cut in shocking gashes, and one of his arms cut off. Sheriff Burke sent up two deputies a week ago last Saturday, who arrested Walker and, after a proper investigation, lodged him in Mobile jail. Mobley had not been arrested at last accounts.

Judas Mahone, Esq.

Wytheville, Va., special: The first note in the red-hot warfare about to be begun in the State between the opponents of boss rule and William Mahone was sounded by State Senator Newberry here to-day. Newberry is the leader of what is known as the Big Four in the Virginia Senate, and it was through their efforts that Mahone was defeated in the carrying out of his corrupt schemes. Newberry is a prominent member of the Readjuster party, and refused to stomach all of Mahone's rule. His speech is significant. His arraignment of Mahone was one of the most savage onslaughts ever heard made on a political leader. He declared that he was the most ungrateful, imperious, dictatorial and corrupt politican he had ever known. He compared him to Aaron Burr, Benedict Arnold and Judas Iscariott, and said had he lived in the days of Judas he would have sold his Maker for twenty pieces of silver, instead of thirty the price obtained by Judas; that when he had control of a great railroad corporation he had perpetrated a swindle amounting to $6,000,000, and that for his part he would not exchange his good name for all of Mahone's ill-gotten gains. He denounced him as a scoundrel, a notorious infidel and a gambler by profession and inheritance, and said that when he went to Richmond he did not put up at a hotel, like a gentlemen, but made his headquarters at a regular gambling den. Was not it a disgrace to modern civilization and to this Christian Commonwealth, he said, to have such a character undertaking to play the role of Boss? He regretted that Mahone was not present; he would rather meet him in discussion face to face and tell him what he thought of him than to meet any other man in the State, and took occasion to announce that he would speak at Giles and Pulaski Courts, and challenged the Boss or any of his lickspittles to meet him at these appointments in debate. He intended to make it hot for them.

Mr. Cather, of the Ashville Ægis, forecasts the weather for June as follows:

1st–8th, hot, fair or clear.
9th–15th, very warm, rain.
16th–20th, hot, fair.
21st–30th, rain, hot.

This month indicates stormy weather after the 8th all over the country. But no indications of wet or cold weather, except about the 9th, in northern and northwestern districts. The cooler weather will be felt in the northern parts of the southern districts.

Cotton-Spinning in the South.

A great deal has been said recently about the increase in cotton spinning in the South, but those who have not kept posted will be astonished at the actual figures. Almost every few days there are new manufactories springing into existence, and the rapid increase in cotton manufacturing South will greatly change all previous estimates and cause the importance of this industry to be more fully recognized in the markets. Within the past and during the present year of 1881-'2 the increase is enormous, a recapitulation showing a total increase of 361,000 spindles, nearly one-third of this being in Georgia and South Carolina. The increase in Georgia has been 106,000 spindles, in Alabama, 34,000, in Tennessee, 24,000, in Mississippi, 32,000, in Louisiana, 21,000, North Carolina, 48,000, in South Carolina, 96,000. Total new spindles 361,000.

Estimating the cost at $27 per spindle, it gives an investment in this machinery of $9,763,200; to which, adding twenty-five per cent, for operating capital, gives a total investment in these new enterprises of $12,214,000.

Vanderbilt's Preposterous Wealth.

Gath: Talking to a friend of William Vanderbilt yesterday, who was defending his genial character, the following remark was dropped: "The wealth of Mr. Vanderbilt is the most preposterous thing about him or about our times. To think that an individual has $10,000,000 more invested in the Government bonds than the entire banking capital of the city of New York! money which moves this [illegible] and all its connections [illegible] regularly to $60,000,000, and Mr. Vanderbilt has one-sixth more money in the Government bonds than all that. Fortunately he is not much of an enterprising, absolute, tyrannical man, or that amount of money would work a degree of corruption about the Legislatures, and even on Congress, that would be fatal to the public liberties. I hope to God that we shall have few such fortunes accumulated in this country.

It is reported that 2,252 women are engaged in farming in Indiana.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Glad to meet Col. J. M. Falkner, Montgomery, in Clanton, on onday last.

Tell your neighbor that the EW is a good paper and get him subscribe for it.

Clanton is proverbially healthy, d we hear of several families ho intend summering here.

We would be glad to have our orrespondents keep us posted in gard to the crops in their respecive neighborhoods.

Miss Gussie Evans, one of Clanon's lovely belles, is in the city, he guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis teed.—Talladega Mt. Home.

A protracted meeting was held n the Methodist Church at this lace during the past week. It is to e regretted that it was not more uccessful.

Parties indebted to this office for dvertising will save themselves ollector's fees by settling their acounts as soon as they receive their ills.

Peaches are ripening quite rapidly. Dr. Lanier presented us with some very fine ones of the Amelia variety, the other day. Chilton is a good fruit raising section.

Mr. F. J. Davis, of Clanton, has laid on our table fine specimens of the early Amsden peach, which he is raising. They are ripening quite fast, and he is shipping them north.

Mr. W. L. Bandy, of this county, who spent the winter at Tampa, Fla., in hopes of improving his health, has returned to his home at Jemison. We are sorry to learn that his condition has not improved.

Wanted, at this office, one hat full of bumble-bees. We want to make a present of hat and bees to our Callierville correspondent for the purpose of waking him up. He seems to be the "deadest man in Bagdad."

A petition has been extensively signed and sent to Washington, asking for the establishing of a mail route from Maplesville via Clanton to Columbiana. Such a route would be of great advantage, and especially so to the people of northeast Chilton. Should the route be established, application will be made for the establishment of a post office in that neighborhood.

A Negro Fatally Shot.

On Wednesday morning a negro by the name of Lewis Owen was shot by Henry Foshee, another negro, near Clanton. We understand that Owen, who had previously made threats to shoot Foshee, went to the latter's house armed with a shot gun, presumably for the purpose of carrying out his threat. He called Foshee out, and the latter came to his door with a shot gun and immediately fired upon Owen, planting a load of twelve buck shot in his breast. Foshee then came to Clanton for medical aid. Owen is represented as a bad character. There seems to be no chance of his recovery. No arrest made up to present writing.

Runaway Accident.

Almost a serious accident occurred on last Saturday. The picnicers were returning to their homes, and on nearing Clanton, the mule attached to the buggy of Mr. W. T. Callen, in which were Miss Mary Callen, Miss Rosa Thornton and himself, became frightened, and in running away, the buggy was overturned, and all three were thrown out. Miss Rosa and Mr. Callen were not hurt, but Miss Mary was less fortunate, she receiving quite a severe fall. We are glad to able to state that her injuries are not serious, and that she is recovering.

Verbena Booming.

Verbena is still improving. The new hotel will be quite an ornament to the village, as will also Mr. Brooks' new store, both of which will be standing monuments to the progress and enterprise of the projectors. We see also, that the Verbena Amateurs are gaining considerable fame abroad. Wonder, if they couldn't put "Patience" on the boards. When Mr. Brooks gets into his new quarters, he will no doubt tell the people what he has to sell, in an enlarged advertisement in THE VIEW.

The Fire Fiend.

The dwelling of Mr. Reuben Popwell, one mile east of Clanton, was burned to the ground on last Monday night, and all of its contents were destroyed. There was no one on the premises at the time. Mr. Popwell and his family being absent on a visit. It is not known how the fire originated. Some of the citizens of Clanton contributed toward furnishing a new house, and Mr. Popwell will rebuild in the fall.

Sherman's Mine Caves In.

A land slide at Sherman's copper mine east of Clanton, caused the death of a negro on last Thursday morning. A mass of rock and earth fell on three men, one white and two colored. They were dug out —when two were found alive and the other (colored) was found dead —a very large rock having fallen upon him.

We call attention this week to the advertisement of the "American Universal Cyclopedia." It is one of the best works of the kind extant, being a verbatim reprint of Chambers' Encyclopedia, with fifteen thousand titles added on American subjects. Price in cloth $25.

Clanton depot is livening up since the late change of schedule. The railroad men all like to stop here, and say they would like to have a railroad hotel established here, as it is the most eligible point for one, between Decatur and Montgomery.

We have received two pieces of music entitled "L'Elegante" and "Saluta Birmingham" composed by Mrs. T. Newman, of Birmingham, and published by W. A. Child, of Montgomery. Price 30 cents per copy.

Mr. A. L. Haralson, of Verbena, is selling an excellent map of the United States. He will canvass the county for subscriptions to it.

Prayers for the newspapers and magazine press of the whole country were offered at several religious meetings in New York City, recently. Thanks! Wonder whether they offered any petitions for delinquent subscribers? Those are the fellows that need them most.
Exchange.

Building in the Sand.

'Tis well to woo, 'tis well to wed,
For so the world hath done,
Once myrtles grew and roses blew,
And morning brought the sun;
But have a care, ye young and fair,
Be sure you pledge in truth;
Be certain that your love will wear
Beyond the days of youth!
For if ye give not heart for heart,
As well as hand for hand,
You'll find you've played the unwise part
And built "upon the sand."

'Tis well to save, 'tis well to have
A goodly store of gold,
And hold enough of shining stuff,
For charity is bold.
But place not all your hopes and trust
In what the deep mine brings;
We cannot live on yellow dust
Unmixed with purer things,
And he who piles up wealth alone
Will often have to stand
Beside the coffer chest and own
He "built upon the sand."

'Tis good to speak in friendly guise
And soothe where'er you can;
Fair speech should bind the human mind
And love link man to man.
But stop not at the gentle words;
Let deeds with language dwell
The one who pities starving birds
Should scatter crumbs as well.
The mercy that is warm and true
Must lend a helping hand,
For those that talk, yet fail to do,
But "build upon the sand."

Mistaken.

The last issue of the Birmingham Observer contains the following item:

"Last November, the editor of the CHILTON VIEW and other prominent citizens went out to hunt rabbits. As a matter of fact, they carried guns and pistols. The circuit [illegible] which has been in session th[illegible] the grand jury found a true bil[illegible]inst one of the parties for carr[illegible] concealed weapons. It was p[illegible] that the weapon was not conceal[illegible]t carried openly. Now, in the face of all this, the judge imposed a fine of $100 and costs, and says he is determined no one "shall carry a pistol without his consent." This is certainly a new dash on the judge's part, and will meet the disapproval of many citizens in Chilton county."

We don't know whether the editor of the Observer has been misinformed, or whether he is only drawing on his extraordinary imaginative powers, which we fear he occasionally enlivens by a too free indulgence in Birmingham "bug-juice." However, we will inform him that such a hunt never took place, and such a fine was not imposed, and that it is now in order for the judge and the "prominent citizens" alluded to, to join hands and sue him for libel. We think it would be best for him never to attempt to judge of the qualities of Magic City "stagger-juice."

For the Journey of Life.

The following rules from the papers of Dr. West, according to his memorandum, are thrown together as general waymarks in the journey of life:

Never ridicule sacred things, or what others may esteem as such, however absurd they may appear to you.

Never show levity when people are engaged in worship. Never resent a supposed injury till you know the views and motives of the author of it.

Always take the part of an absent person, who may be censured in company, so far as truth and propriety will allow.

Never think worse of another on account of his differing with you on political and religious subjects.

Never dispute with a man who is more than seventy years of age, nor with a woman, nor any sort of enthusiast.

Never affect to be witty, or to jest so as to hurt the feelings of another.

Act with cheerfulness, but without levity.

Never court the favor of the rich by flattering their vanities or their riches.

Speak with calmness and deliberation on all occasions, especially of those circumstances which tend to irritate.

He opened the door cautiously, and poking his head in, in a suggestive sort of way, as if there was more to follow, inquired, 'is this the rinktum?' "The what, my friend?" "Is this the rinktum—sinktum—sanctum, or some such place, where the editors live?" "This is the editorial room, yes, sir, Come in." "No; I guess I won't come in. I wanted to see what a rinktum was like, that's all. Looks like our garret, only wuss. Good day."

At Ormskirk, England, a young woman has died apparently from the effects of a fright caused by suddenly hearing the loud yelp of a dog as she was walking through the street.

AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

Southern Emigration.

We publish below a circular letter lately received from the Southern Land, Emigration and Improvement Company, which has its headquarters in New York City, asking information in regard to our county, its people, climate, &c. We have sent them what information we have been able to gain, and we herewith publish the letter, in order that any persons having land to sell may write to them. The address of the Company is 75, 76 and 77 Temple Court, New York City.

NEW YORK, May 19, 1882.

To the Editor of the Chilton View:

Dear Sir—With the view of bringing to the notice of emigrants constantly arriving at this port in large numbers, the many and superior advantages offered by the South to persons of moderate means, this office would respectfully invite such information and data as may tend to attract settlers to your section.

The tide of emigration is now turning in a marked degree towards the South. It will fertilize the Southern States—rich in only partially developed resources—in the same way that it has conduced to the rapid, mighty growth of the West. It is only a question of time, which you have the power to hasten. Knowing the interest you must have in this great question, and the wide range of information thereon at your command, we take the liberty of asking you the following questions:

1. Are there any lands in your vicinity for sale?
2. What quantity and where located?
3. Are said lands cleared or wood land?
4. Do they contain minerals, if so, what kinds?
5. Is there water power, and to what extent?
6. Are there schools and churches (what denomination) adjacent?
7. How near to railroads constructed in course of construction, or contemplated?
8. What is the nature and attractiveness of your climate?
9. How will new settlers be received?

An early response to the above inquiries, together with any further information you may be pleased to give, will be highly appreciated by us.

Respectfully,
J. W. MAGUIRE, Secretary.

The Office Seeks the Man.

We publish elsewhere, a letter from Hon. Thomas Williams, congressman from this district, written to the editor of the Tallapoosa Democrat. Mr. Williams has never been a candidate for the office which he holds, and this will go far toward again securing him the nomination. His is a rare case indeed.

Another thing to commend Mr. Williams to the people of the district, is, that he is the only practical farmer in the Alabama delegation. In a State where farming is so extensively engaged in, it is nothing but justice that competent representatives should be placed in the halls of legislation to protect the interests of agriculture, and to advocate laws for its advancement, and for the improvement of the condition of the farmer. We are not an advocate of any man's claims for the position, but in this case, where the man has never sought the office, and yet has filled it so commendably to himself and with such satisfaction to his constituents, we think it well that he should be returned.

Skillful Legislation.

The Sheriffs of Alabama are just now in some tribulation over a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the State, construing anew a law passed by the last Legislature in reference to the feeding of prisoners charged with criminal offenses during their term of incarceration while awaiting trial. A communication to the Huntsville Independent, published elsewhere, states clearly the whole difficulty. It is simply the result of an oversight on the part of experienced, wise and capable members of our legislature. The oversight is likely to cause the sheriffs of populous counties like this especial embarrassment. They are almost forced to expend several thousand dollars for the feed of prisoners, and run the risk of never getting it back, or else to resign. Unless a sheriff is a rich man, or has a fine credit to go into such a hotel business on his own account, he can not discharge the duties of his office. Furthermore if he has or can command the requisite means, he must have an unlimited confidence in the political complexion and philanthropic disposition of the next legislature in order to get his consent to go into such a business. What the present result will be can not be guessed. Possibly the State Auditor and Treasurer may have the nerve to run the risk of disobeying the law, and to come to the rescue of the helpless sheriffs. If they do not, the boards of commissioners of the various counties will be compelled to feed prisoners whom necessity or discretion may cause the Sheriff to leave to starve. The embarrassment results from awkwardly dovetailed laws, and is a most timely and convincing proof of the ineffectiveness of our legislators because of actual ignorance and experience. They do not know thoroughly what our laws are, and hence make great mistakes in changing or adding to them. Of course the present trouble will be remedied next winter, but in the meantime let the people everywhere learn a lesson from the occurrence. Select your representatives carefully, get men of fine common sense, discerning judgment and sterling character, rather than of brilliancy or popular bearing, and then keep them in office, train them, make them capable, useful, effective legislators. Then no such bungling as the case in hand will occur.—Selma Times.

Hon. Thomas Williams.

In an open letter to the editor of the Tallapoosa Democrat, Hon. Thomas Williams says, in answer to the question, whether or not he would "again be a candidate before the Congressional Convention:"—"I beg to assure you that I never have been, as your inquiry assumes, a candidate for nomination to the position I now hold. The honor comes to me unsought; and deeply grateful to the people for the honor thus conferred, I have endeavored, faithfully and honestly, and in that way seemed to me most discrete and beneficial to my people, to represent their interest. While I am not a candidate and will not consent to enter a scramble for the nomination; yet, if the people of the district deem it proper to nominate me, I will not be unmindful of such a recognition of my services—will accept their nomination, and if elected will endeavor to represent their true interest, with proper discretion, zeal and fidelity."

In Col. Williams' case, the office has in each instance sought the man, and he stands now as he did at first, "ready to serve the people should they desire his services."

Selma Times: Through the courtesy of Messrs. Garland and Winter, the managers of the Selma and Montgomery telegraph offices respectively, the Times and Advertiser telephones were connected yesterday, and conversation was carried on for several minutes. A new Western Union wire has just been arranged between the two cities, the sounds being much more distinct than we have before found them. They came as clearly and voices could be recognized as readily as in our exchange. The music of "Grandfather's Clock" on an organettee in the Advertiser office was so well heard that several persons at the Times telephone readily recognized the music as coming from that unique instrument.

Clark County Democrat: About the 4th or 5th inst., as W. alias "Shanghai" Walker, L. L. Hand, and Billy Mobley, the last colored, were taking a raft to Mobile, from the lower end of this county, Hand was murdered and thrown into the river while passing Twelve-Mile Island, according to Walker's statement. The raft was taken to Mobile and disposed of, and Walker and Mobley returned, giving different and conflicting stories as to what had become of the missing man. Walker brought back Hand's rifle, some groceries and other articles. Some of the citizens of the "Fork," whose suspicious were aroused as to the fate of Hand, wrote to Sheriff Peter Burke, of Mobile, in relation to the matter, giving a description of the strangely absent man. A few days before this the body of a man was found in the river, a short distance above Mobile, corresponding well with the given description of Hand, though horribly mutilated. His head was crushed in, and the back part of it cut off; his face cut in shocking gashes, and one of his arms cut off. Sheriff Burke sent up two deputies a week ago last Saturday, who arrested Walker and, after a proper investigation, lodged him in Mobile jail. Mobley had not been arrested at last accounts.

Judas Mahone, Esq.

Wytheville, Va., special: The first note in the red-hot warfare about to be begun in the State between the opponents of boss rule and William Mahone was sounded by State Senator Newberry here to-day. Newberry is the leader of what is known as the Big Four in the Virginia Senate, and it was through their efforts that Mahone was defeated in the carrying out of his corrupt schemes. Newberry is a prominent member of the Readjuster party, and refused to stomach all of Mahone's rule. His speech is significant. His arraignment of Mahone was one of the most savage onslaughts ever heard made on a political leader. He declared that he was the most ungrateful, imperious, dictatorial and corrupt politican he had ever known. He compared him to Aaron Burr, Benedict Arnold and Judas Iscariott, and said had he lived in the days of Judas he would have sold his Maker for twenty pieces of silver, instead of thirty the price obtained by Judas; that when he had control of a great railroad corporation he had perpetrated a swindle amounting to $6,000,000, and that for his part he would not exchange his good name for all of Mahone's ill-gotten gains. He denounced him as a scoundrel, a notorious infidel and a gambler by profession and inheritance, and said that when he went to Richmond he did not put up at a hotel, like a gentlemen, but made his headquarters at a regular gambling den. Was not it a disgrace to modern civilization and to this Christian Commonwealth, he said, to have such a character undertaking to play the role of Boss? He regretted that Mahone was not present; he would rather meet him in discussion face to face and tell him what he thought of him than to meet any other man in the State, and took occasion to announce that he would speak at Giles and Pulaski Courts, and challenged the Boss or any of his lickspittles to meet him at these appointments in debate. He intended to make it hot for them.

Mr. Cather, of the Ashville Ægis, forecasts the weather for June as follows:

1st–8th, hot, fair or clear.
9th–15th, very warm, rain.
16th–20th, hot, fair.
21st–30th, rain, hot.

This month indicates stormy weather after the 8th all over the country. But no indications of wet or cold weather, except about the 9th, in northern and northwestern districts. The cooler weather will be felt in the northern parts of the southern districts.

Cotton-Spinning in the South.

A great deal has been said recently about the increase in cotton spinning in the South, but those who have not kept posted will be astonished at the actual figures. Almost every few days there are new manufactories springing into existence, and the rapid increase in cotton manufacturing South will greatly change all previous estimates and cause the importance of this industry to be more fully recognized in the markets. Within the past and during the present year of 1881-'2 the increase is enormous, a recapitulation showing a total increase of 361,000 spindles, nearly one-third of this being in Georgia and South Carolina. The increase in Georgia has been 106,000 spindles, in Alabama, 34,000, in Tennessee, 24,000, in Mississippi, 32,000, in Louisiana, 21,000, North Carolina, 48,000, in South Carolina, 96,000. Total new spindles 361,000.

Estimating the cost at $27 per spindle, it gives an investment in this machinery of $9,763,200; to which, adding twenty-five per cent, for operating capital, gives a total investment in these new enterprises of $12,214,000.

Vanderbilt's Preposterous Wealth.

Gath: Talking to a friend of William Vanderbilt yesterday, who was defending his genial character, the following remark was dropped: "The wealth of Mr. Vanderbilt is the most preposterous thing about him or about our times. To think that an individual has $10,000,000 more invested in the Government bonds than the entire banking capital of the city of New York! money which moves this va[illegible] and all its connections amounts regularly to $60,000,000, and Mr. Vanderbilt has one-sixth more money in the Government bonds than all that. Fortunately he is not much of an enterprising, absolute, tyrannical man, or that amount of money would work a degree of corruption about the Legislatures, and even on Congress, that would be fatal to the public liberties. I hope to God that we shall have few such fortunes accumulated in this country.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Glad to meet Col. J. M. Falkner, Montgomery, in Clanton, on onday last.

Tell your neighbor that the EW is a good paper and get him subscribe for it.

Clanton is proverbially healthy, d we hear of several families ho intend summering here.

We would be glad to have our rrespondents keep us posted in gard to the crops in their respecive neighborhoods.

Miss Gussie Evans, one of Clanon's lovely belles, is in the city, e guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis eed.—Talladega Mt. Home.

A protracted meeting was held n the Methodist Church at this lace during the past week. It is to e regretted that it was not more uccessful.

Parties indebted to this office for dvertising will save themselves ollector's fees by settling their acounts as soon as they receive their bills.

Peaches are ripening quite rapidly. Dr. Lanier presented us with some very fine ones of the Amelia variety, the other day. Chilton is a good fruit raising section.

Mr. F. J. Davis, of Clanton, has laid on our table fine specimens of the early Amsden peach, which he is raising. They are ripening quite fast, and he is shipping them north.

Mr. W. L. Bandy, of this county, who spent the winter at Tampa, Fla., in hopes of improving his health, has returned to his home at Jemison. We are sorry to learn that his condition has not improved.

Wanted, at this office, one hat full of bumble-bees. We want to make a present of hat and bees to our Callierville correspondent for the purpose of waking him up. He seems to be the "deadest man in Bagdad."

A petition has been extensively signed and sent to Washington, asking for the establishing of a mail route from Maplesville via Clanton to Columbiana. Such a route would be of great advantage, and especially so to the people of northeast Chilton. Should the route be established, application will be made for the establishment of a post office in that neighborhood.

A Negro Fatally Shot.

On Wednesday morning a negro by the name of Lewis Owen was shot by Henry Foshee, another negro, near Clanton. We understand that Owen, who had previously made threats to shoot Foshee, went to the latter's house armed with a shot gun, presumably for the purpose of carrying out his threat. He called Foshee out, and the latter came to his door with a shot gun and immediately fired upon Owen, planting a load of twelve buck shot in his breast. Foshee then came to Clanton for medical aid. Owen is represented as a bad character. There seems to be no chance of his recovery. No arrest made up to present writing.

Runaway Accident.

Almost a serious accident occurred on last Saturday. The picnicers were returning to their homes, and on nearing Clanton, the mule attached to the buggy of Mr. W. T. Callen, in which were Miss Mary Callen, Miss Rosa Thornton and himself, became frightened, and in running away, the buggy was overturned, and all three were thrown out. Miss Rosa and Mr. Callen were not hurt, but Miss Mary was less fortunate, she receiving quite a severe fall. We are glad to able to state that her injuries are not serious, and that she is recovering.

Verbena Booming.

Verbena is still improving. The new hotel will be quite an ornament to the village, as will also Mr. Brooks' new store, both of which will be standing monuments to the progress and enterprise of the projectors. We see also, that the Verbena Amateurs are gaining considerable fame abroad. Wonder, if they couldn't put "Patience" on the boards. When Mr. Brooks gets into his new quarters, he will no doubt tell the people what he has to sell, in an enlarged advertisement in THE VIEW.

The Fire Fiend.

The dwelling of Mr. Reuben Popwell, one mile east of Clanton, was burned to the ground on last Monday night, and all of its contents were destroyed. There was no one on the premises at the time. Mr. Popwell and his family being absent on a visit. It is not known how the fire originated. Some of the citizens of Clanton contributed toward furnishing a new house, and Mr. Popwell will rebuild in the fall.

Sherman's Mine Caves In.

A land slide at Sherman's copper mine east of Clanton, caused the death of a negro on last Thursday morning. A mass of rock and earth fell on three men, one white and two colored. They were dug out —when two were found alive and the other (colored) was found dead —a very large rock having fallen upon him.

We call attention this week to the advertisement of the "American Universal Cyclopedia." It is one of the best works of the kind extant, being a verbatim reprint of Chambers' Encyclopedia, with fifteen thousand titles added on American subjects. Price in cloth $25.

Clanton depot is livening up since the late change of schedule. The railroad men all like to stop here, and say they would like to have a railroad hotel established here, as it is the most eligible point for one, between Decatur and Montgomery.

We have received two pieces of music entitled "L'Elegante" and "Saluta Birmingham" composed by Mrs. T. Newman, of Birmingham, and published by W. A. Child, of Montgomery. Price 30 cents per copy.

Mr. A. L. Haralson, of Verbena, is selling an excellent map of the United States. He will canvass the county for subscriptions to it.

Prayers for the newspapers and magazine press of the whole country were offered at several religious meetings in New York City, recently. Thanks! Wonder whether they offered any petitions for delinquent subscribers? Those are the fellows that need them most.

Building in the Sand.

'Tis well to woo, 'tis well to wed,
For so the world hath done,
Once myrtles grew and roses blew,
And morning brought the sun;
But have a care, ye young and fair,
Be sure you pledge in truth;
Be certain that your love will wear
Beyond the days of youth!
For if ye give not heart for heart,
As well as hand for hand,
You'll find you've played the unwise part
And built "upon the sand."

'Tis well to save, 'tis well to have
A goodly store of gold,
And hold enough of shining stuff,
For charity is bold.
But place not all your hopes and trust
In what the deep mine brings;
We cannot live on yellow dust
Unmixed with purer things,
And he who piles up wealth alone
Will often have to stand
Beside the coffer chest and own
He "built upon the sand."

'Tis good to speak in friendly guise
And soothe where'er you can;
Fair speech should bind the human mind
And love link man to man.
But stop not at the gentle words;
Let deeds with language dwell
The one who pities starving birds
Should scatter crumbs as well.
The mercy that is warm and true
Must lend a helping hand,
For those that talk, yet fail to do,
But "build upon the sand."

Mistaken.

The last issue of the Birmingham Observer contains the following item:

"Last November, the editor of the CHILTON VIEW and other prominent citizens went out to hunt rabbits. As a matter of fact, they carried guns and pistols. The circuit c[illegible]t which has been in session th[illegible] the grand jury found a true bil[illegible]inst one of the parties for carr[illegible] concealed weapons. It was p[illegible] that the weapon was not conceal[illegible]ut carried openly. Now, in the face of all this, the judge imposed a fine of $100 and costs, and says he is determined no one "shall carry a pistol without his consent." This is certainly a new dash on the judge's part, and will meet the disapproval of many citizens in Chilton county."

We don't know whether the editor of the Observer has been misinformed, or whether he is only drawing on his extraordinary imaginative powers, which we fear he occasionally enlivens by a too free indulgence in Birmingham "bug-juice." However, we will inform him that such a hunt never took place, and such a fine was not imposed, and that it is now in order for the judge and the "prominent citizens" alluded to, to join hands and sue him for libel. We think it would be best for him never to attempt to judge of the qualities of Magic City "stagger-juice."

For the Journey of Life.

The following rules from the papers of Dr. West, according to his memorandum, are thrown together as general waymarks in the journey of life:

Never ridicule sacred things, or what others may esteem as such, however absurd they may appear to you.

Never show levity when people are engaged in worship. Never resent a supposed injury till you know the views and motives of the author of it.

Always take the part of an absent person, who may be censured in company, so far as truth and propriety will allow.

Never think worse of another on account of his differing with you on political and religious subjects.

Never dispute with a man who is more than seventy years of age, nor with a woman, nor any sort of enthusiast.

Never affect to be witty, or to jest so as to hurt the feelings of another.

Act with cheerfulness, but without levity.

Never court the favor of the rich by flattering their vanities or their riches.

Speak with calmness and deliberation on all occasions, especially of those circumstances which tend to irritate.

He opened the door cautiously, and poking his head in, in a suggestive sort of way, as if there was more to follow, inquired, 'is this the rinktum?' "The what, my friend?" "Is this the rinktum—sinktum—sanctum, or some such place, where the editors live?" "This is the editorial room, yes, sir, Come in." "No; I guess I won't come in. I wanted to see what a rinktum was like, that's all. Looks like our garret, only wuss. Good day."

At Ormskirk, England, a young woman has died apparently from the effects of a fright caused by suddenly hearing the loud yelp of a dog as she was walking through the street.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

WOMAN GOSSIP.

Why She Doesn't Count the Years.

In the green-room of a Parisian theater the conversation turned upon the delicate subject of age. Presently a gentleman visitor ventured upon the indiscreet query:

"Now, what age are you, my dear friend?" addressing his remark to Mlle. X., who certainly can no longer be considered in her first youth.

"What a question, indeed!" said the lady; "how can that possibly interest you?"

"Simply curiosity," responded the visitor.

"Well, then, I will be frank with you. Really I don't know. One counts one's money, one's jewels, and one's deeds of value, because it may happen that they could be lost or stolen, but, as I am absolutely certain that nobody will take a year from my age, and that I shall never lose one, why where is the need of counting?"—London Era.

Just the Same.

There was a crowd of carriages in front of a church when a man came along, discovered that something was going on, and, leaning against a hitching post, he asked of a pedestrian:

"Was it very sudden?"

"I don't know."

"Presume it was. Well, we've all got to go that way. Do you know, sir, that—that—"

Here his voice broke down and he reached for his handkerchief.

"What's the matter?" inquired the other.

"Young woman's funeral in there."

"That's no funeral; that's a marriage!"

"Marriage! Ah—yes—marriage—I see. Well, it's all the same to me. Give me the young man's name and I'll weep over him!"

Discounting Physiology.

"Your heart," said the lecturer, "beats seventy times a minute." Well, we don't know much about physiology and anatomy, but this heart business depends a great deal. The ordinary heart may be able to get along very comfortably on seventy beats a minute in the day time and at dinner or at church or that sort of thing, but bless your anatomical ideas, doctor, we have stood on the outside of a little, swinging gate, no later than 10 o'clock on a night in June, not saying a word, but just looking at a pair ot brown eyes on the other side of the pickets—eyes that paled the starlight—and just waiting for the moon to get under a cloud, and—and—why—why, man alive—seventy times a minute? Seventy times? A minute? Why, even unto seventy times seventy a second would only be an approximate estimate. We never tried to count them, but we know that seventy times a minute wasn't even freight-train time under those circumstances.—Burdette.

Revival of Hoop-Skirts.

One of the most alarming announcements in recent foreign news is the reappearance in Paris and London of the enormous crinoline hoop-skirt. As it has appeared there, it must of course soon appear here. There is no calamity so great, however, that it has not some compensation. It will be the first severe blow at modern estheticism as applied to house furnishing. The modern house is at present a museum of blue china plates, tea-pots, sugar-bowls, jugs, vases, placques and crockery in all states of age and dilapidation, beside numerous other flimsy and brittle objects of bric-a-brac, ormolu, buhl, bijonterie and vertu, which are not arranged in any order or system, but are piled up and thrown round helter-skelter, and in all sorts of confusion. To navigate safely among them, even with the present limp and clinging styles of drapery, requires great skill and circumspection, but when women envelop themselves in crinoline and go sailing about like balloons, the esthetic stuff has got to be moved or go to everlasting smash. As fashion is the ruling element in the female mind, as between hoops and blue china the latter will have to go.

Etiquette of Making Calls.

The toilet for a ceremonious visit should be quiet, but somewhat more careful and elegant than for a mere walk or drive. The lady who is receiving wears a pretty home dress of handsome silk, when it is cool enough, or in summer of dainty muslin or some soft-falling, thin fabric which suits the summer warmth. She should never wear diamonds or flowers, other than a summer rose or some such trifle stuck carelessly in belt or buttonhole.

The lady of the house always rises to receive her guest, and usually gives her hand, with some cordial expression of greeting, whether the visitor is a lady or a gentleman; but men do not usually take the initiative in shaking hands. The hostess, if possible, addresses a special remark or two to the last comer, and then, if several people are present, she tries to make the conversation general. If her guests are too numerous for this, she is at least careful to talk more or less with each one, and to see that everybody is busy and entertained. While as a rule the courtesy of a hostess should be as equally distributed as possible, it is quite allowable for her to pay special attention to any very old people who have taken the trouble to come to her, or to any one of special intellectual distinction. If, for instance, Emerson or Longfellow had honored her with a call, she would be readily pardoned for according them more than the ordinary share of her time; while to confer extra civility upon the rich merely because they are rich is a snobbishness of which a lady who respected her own ladyhood could hardly be guilty.

An introduction during a morning visit commits no one to a farther acquaintance. It is simply a means of putting two guests at ease with each other, and should always be acknowledged courteously at the time and followed by a brief chat.

In America, as in England, it is customary for residents to call on the stranger. The only American exception to this rule is in Washington—a place which has its own social code. Where two people meet pleasantly at a friend's house, one may very properly say to the other: "I hope you will come and see me;" and such an invitation should always be courteously acknowledged, and, if it is desirable to accept it, accepted without any foolish argument as to who should make the first call. It is only the people who have no confidence in themselves or in their own positions who are careful and troubled about the trifles of social life, and afraid of putting their dignity in peril by too much cordiality.

The custom of making formal visits is a necessary social tax, from the payment of which it is impossible for one holding any place in society to escape. Nine times out of ten such a visit is a bore—the tenth time may be as delightful as to chance upon a rose growing under a hedge in February. You come upon somebody who says just the right word, who gives you a fresh thought, a new inspiration, an unexpected glimpse of loveliness of character, and you go away wiser and happier for the visit. But one does not every day find roses under hedge-rows, and many of our visits must come into the category of a tax which one finds little more pleasure in paying than in discharging a water rate or a gas bill, but which is just as necessary as either. It would be a sad world in which we knew no one intimately, had no warm surrounding circle of cordial friends; and to know people intimately it is first necessary to know them formally, and to this end morning visits.

A Little Small Talk.

AFTER all, the ladies are best pleased with a bachelor President, for then the Senators' wives get a chance to play at "first lady of the land" in turn.

CHICAGO girls have discovered that by keeping five or six beans in the mouth the voice is given an "old, aristocratic family" accent—something between a fall down stairs and trying to sing with the head in a box.

CERTAIN rich young men of Chicago, who possibly know more about the accumulation of money than they do of ettiquette, have engraved on their visiting cards the names of the various clubs to which they belong.

YES, girls, adopt the new fashion and curl the hair, plait it, tie in a top-knot, anything to do away with the abominable modern bangs. It is, without doubt, the most unbecoming style of hair-dressing ever invented.

A WRITER says that Washington ladies who carry pistols are fastidious about the mountings of the weapons, often paying as much as eighteen dollars for a tiny revolver. Some of them are good markswomen, and they have not yet furnished a single case of didn't-know-it-was-loaded.

A MUSICIAN thus defines the ladies: At 15 years of age a lady is an arpeggio; at 20 years of age a lady is an allegro vivace; at 30 years of age a lady is an accordo forte; at 40 years of age a lady is an andante; at 50 years of age commences the rondo finale; at 60 years of age it is a tremolo alla sordina.

THERE was nothing peculiar about a recent Toronto wedding up to the point when the married couple quitted the church, then the bride dropped her husband's arm, got into her father's carriage and returned home alone. She refused to see him again, or make any explanation of her conduct.

MRS. JANE G. SWISSHELM says: "We need a standing army about as much as we need ostrich feathers." If Jane was a giddy young thing of sweet 17, or thereabout, she would say: "We need ostrich feathers ten times more than we need a standing army." Young women can worry along without a standing army, but they must have ostrich feathers.

THE Pot Luck Club, composed of some 500 ladies and gentlemen, had a dinner at Irving Hall, in New York. Ice-cream was the first dish served, and entrees and roasts made up the final service. The waitresses were dressed in costumes medieval, Romanesque and Florentine, and the male waiters were a herd of young Bunthornes and Grosvenors, with flowing blonde wigs and knee-breeches. The bill of fare included in its designation "Wilde, weird, fleshly, and yet very tender, chowder," "limply clinging pie," "love-sick salad," "too-too-ti-frutti," "early English butter-cup and daisies pudding," "soulfully intense tarts," "medieval macaroni," "amaranthine asphodel salad," "Francesca di Rimini fantasies," "fleshly," "precious" and "ecstatic" hams and "hollow-hollow pastry."

WEATHER WISDOM.

One of our prominent attorneys, who is at the same time one of the leading fishermen of the valley, claims that the weather invariably repeats itself, and gives the following as the result of his observations, viz:

All years ending in 9, 0, or 1 are extremely dry.

These ending in 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 are extremely wet.

Those ending in 7 or 8 are ordinarily well-balanced.

Those ending in 6 have extremely cold winters.

Those ending in 2 have an early spring.

Those ending in 1 have a late spring.

Those ending in 3 and 4 are subject to great floods.—Lebanon (Pa.) Times.

WHEN Lord Beaconsfield returned to office after his first retirement, a question arose as to making Lord Rosslyn master of buck hounds. His Lordship had, it was urged, every qualification for the post. He was a good sportsman, was especially good-looking, and would like the work. On the contrary, it was averred that he swore like nobody since the days of the army in Flanders. "Swears, does he?" quoth Dizzy. "Then we will make him Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland." And it was done.

A Judge's Experience.

Judge J. T. Bossier, of St. Tammany parish, La., and of the State Legislature, thus expressed his opinion to one of our representatives: "I have found St. Jacobs Oil to be very efficacious in sprains and bruises. In my opinion there is no oil or liniment equal to it."—New Orleans (La.) Times-Democrat.

SARAH'S COMPLIMENT.

"Gracious me!" exclaimed Sarah, looking into the glass; "how awfully my hair looks. I haven't combed it in two days."

"Why, Sarah," said Lydia, "is it possible? I never should have suspected it. It looks as well as I ever saw it."

Sarah didn't know whether to feel complimented or insulted.—Boston Transcript.

THE result of my use of St. Jacobs Oil for rheumatism is:—I have been recommending it ever since, says the Mayor of Chicago, Hon. Carter H. Harrison, in the Chicago Times.

NOWADAYS it is impossible to listen to the conversation of half a dozen young "society" people without feeling that the American language should be more appropriately styled the American slanguage.

A Bonanza Mine

Of health is to be found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," to the merits of which as a remedy for female weakness and kindred affections thousands testify.

THE Christian Advocate mentions the case of an Irish girl who said she joined the Methodist church "on suspicion" for six months.

"Enjoy Your Life"

Is good philosophy, but to do so you must have health. If bilious and constipated, or blood is out of order, use Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are mild, yet certain in their operation. Of all druggists.

LAST words of Fontenelle: "I do not suffer, my friends, but I feel a certain difficulty in existing."

IF YOU experience bad taste in mouth, sallowness or yellow color of skin, feel stupid and drowsy, appetite unsteady, frequent headache or dizziness, you are "bilious," and nothing will arouse your liver to action and strengthen up your system equal to Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." By druggists.

A LOUISVILLE bill collector, as he says, called upon a creditor 324 times before he got his money. Perseverance will saw a tree down with a hair pin.

From Mississippi

CORINTH, MISS., April 2, 1877.

Capt. W. P. Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.:

Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chaonic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the Liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of the bowels disappeard, and a comforable state of health was soon established. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,

D. S. MALONE.

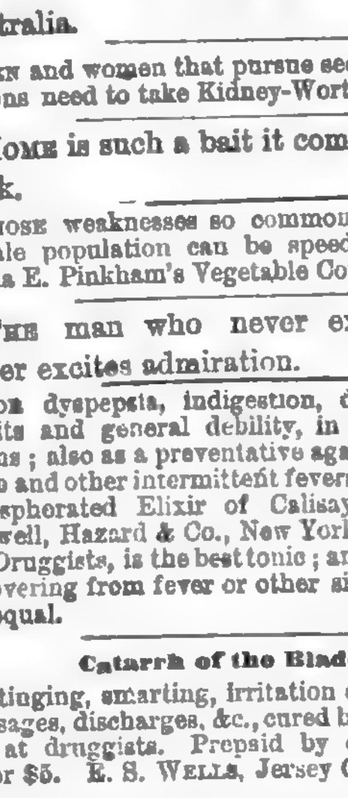
YACHTING.



One of the most manly and satisfying pleasures, as well as the most agreeable, is yachting. The owner of the yacht is one who gathers the chief comfort, as he sails h[illegible] craft fo[illegible] excite[illegible] of th[illegible] or [illegible] the [illegible] en[illegible] [illegible] of [illegible] his [illegible]utiful vessel over the water. Those who have the care, management and working of a yacht dwell almost upon the water. As a class, they are quiet, sober, careful, skilful men, but their life of exposure to the elements is productive of much rheumatism among them, and they suffer considerably from pains, the result of cold, bruises, sprains, &c. St. Jacobs Oil is a favorite remedy with these men, because of the splendid service it renders them. Captain Schmidt, of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., says that he has been a great sufferer from rheumatism for many years. He had severe rheumatic pains in nearly every portion of his body, and suffered so that at times he would be entirely unable to attend to active business. He said: "I am quite well now, however, and, as you see, I am able to work without any trouble. I attribute my recovery entirely to St. JACOBS OIL, for I felt better as soon as I commenced to use that remedy; and whenever I feel anything like rheumatism coming on, I rub the place with the OIL, and it always does what is claimed for it. Finding ST. JACOBS OIL did me so much good, I got my family to use it whenever they had any pains or colds, and it has done good in every case when they have tried it. I can say that ST. JACOBS OIL is a mighty good rheumatic remedy, and I don't intend to be without it." This experience is such as has been enjoyed not only by yachtsmen and others who follow the water, but by people in every walk of life and variety of pursuit the whole world over.

From Mrs. J. V. Wellington, of Cambridgeport, Mass.

DR. J. H. SCHENCK, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: Over twenty-three years ago I was attacked with a hacking cough, which continued for about three months, when I was suddenly taken with a severe hemorrhage. After this I gradually lost strength, and finally got so low as to be confined to my bed. From the first I employed what we considered the best physicians of Boston, but all to no purpose; their medicines gave me but little relief, and I felt, as did all my friends, that I had but a short time to live. In fact the last doctor I had told my sister that I could live but a few weeks. While in this apparently hopeless condition I was visited by an uncle from California, who strongly advised me to take your remedies, saying that he had been cured of Consumption by them. My husband, who had no confidence in patent medicines, was very much opposed to my taking them, but I concluded that as my doctor could do nothing for me, I could not do better than give them a trial.

At this time your father was making professional visits to Boston, and although I was so weak that I had to be lifted into a carriage, I went to see him. He gave but little encouragement, saying that I, like many others, only came to see him after being given up by all other physicians. He promised to do what he could for me, however, and I immediately began taking the Mandrake Pills, Seaweed Tonic and Pulmonic Syrup as he directed. After using them for three weeks I began to improve, and, continuing their use for some months, I got well enough to make a visit to my friends in Philadelphia. I was so low that it took a long time to entirely recover, but I was permanently cured, for I have had excellent health for the last twenty years, with the exception of a slight weakness of the lungs, which compels me to be careful not to take cold.

Soon after my recovery, happening to meet the last physician I employed before using your medicines, he was much surprised to see me alive, but said that he could truly say that I was not the only one he knew who had been greatly benefitted by the use of your medicines.

I feel that I cannot speak two highly of your remedies, believing, as I do, that they saved my life. I have, since my recovery, recommended them to a great many people, and they have almost invariably cured them, the only exception being those who were beyond the power of all medicine. I always keep your remedies in the house, and now consider them the best of all medicines for the diseases you recommend them for.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. J. V. WELLINGTON,

12 Tremont Street, Cambridgeport, Mass.

From E. Narmandin, Jr., Esq., of Woonsocket, R. I.

DR. SCHENCK & SON, Philadelphia.

Dear Sirs: I have been cured of what I believe to have been Liver Complaint in its worst form, which before I got relief, affected my lungs quite seriously. I had used the medicines prescribed by a physician of this place for a long time without benefit before I began to take your remedies. I first heard of them by your advertisement in the Patriot of this place, and concluding to use them, I purchased a bottle of Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic. They gave me great relief, and by the time I had used them up I felt almost well. So I stopped using them for some time, but I soon found that the disease was not broken up. I then got more medicine and continued using it until I was well.

My symptoms were continuous cough, night sweats, raising of matter streaked with blood, soreness in my lungs and at the pit of my stomach, which was also very much swollen at times. I was so weak that I could not go up stairs without help, and was confined to the house for many weeks. I was very much reduced in flesh, and had no appetite, and nothing I ate seemed to digest.

Since my recovery I have recommended your medicines to a great many, among others, a lady who had what everyone supposed to be Consumption of the lungs for four years. She has entirely recovered by the use of them, and is now a strong healthy woman. I can also refer to others in this place who have been greatly benefitted by their use. Yours truly,

E. NARMANDIN, JR.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., June 1st, 1881.

DR. SCHENCK'S

MANDRAKE PILLS

Do not produce sickness at the stomach, nausea or griping. On the contrary, they are so mild and agreeable in their action that a person suffering with a sick headache, sour stomach or pain in the bowels, is speedily relieved of these distressing symptoms. They act directly on the liver, the organ which, when in a healthy condition, purifies the blood for the whole body.

They are a perfect preparation of that great and well-known remedy, Mandrake or Podophyllin, a remedy that has displaced the use of mercury, as well as many other poisonous drugs in the practice of every intelligent physician.

Prof. John King, of the College of Medicine, of Cincinnati, says: "In Constipation it acts upon the bowels without disposing them to subsequent costiveness. In Chronic Liver Complaint there is not its equal in the whole range of medicines, being vastly more useful than mercurial agents, arousing the liver to healthy action, increasing the flow of bile, and keeping up these actions longer than any other agent with which we are acquainted." (See American Dispensatory, page 720.)

In all cases of Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia, when there is great weakness or debility, Dr. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic should be used in connection with these Pills.

"Simply curiosity," responded the visitor.

"Well, then, I will be frank with you. Really I don't know. One counts one's money, one's jewels, and one's deeds of value, because it may happen that they could be lost or stolen, but, as I am absolutely certain that nobody will take a year from my age, and that I shall never lose one, why where is the need of counting?"—London Era.

Just the Same.

There was a crowd of carriages in front of a church when a man came along, discovered that something was going on, and, leaning against a hitching post, he asked of a pedestrian:

"Was it very sudden?"

"I don't know."

"Presume it was. Well, we've all got to go that way. Do you know, sir, that—that—"

Here his voice broke down and he reached for his handkerchief.

"What's the matter?" inquired the other.

"Young woman's funeral in there."

"That's no funeral; that's a marriage!"

"Marriage! Ah—yes—marriage—I see. Well, it's all the same to me. Give me the young man's name and I'll weep over him!"

Discounting Physiology.

"Your heart," said the lecturer, "beats seventy times a minute." Well, we don't know much about physiology and anatomy, but this heart business depends a great deal. The ordinary heart may be able to get along very comfortably on seventy beats a minute in the day time and at dinner or at church or that sort of thing, but bless your anatomical ideas, doctor, we have stood on the outside of a little, swinging gate, no later than 10 o'clock on a night in June, not saying a word, but just looking at a pair of brown eyes on the other side of the pickets—eyes that paled the starlight—and just waiting for the moon to get under a cloud, and—and—why—why, man alive—seventy times a minute? Seventy times? A minute? Why, even unto seventy times seventy a second would only be an approximate estimate. We never tried to count them, but we know that seventy times a minute wasn't even freight-train time under those circumstances.—Burdette.

Revival of Hoop-Skirts.

One of the most alarming announcements in recent foreign news is the reappearance in Paris and London of the enormous crinoline hoop-skirt. As it has appeared there, it must of course soon appear here. There is no calamity so great, however, that it has not some compensation. It will be the first severe blow at modern estheticism as applied to house furnishing. The modern house is at present a museum of blue china plates, tea-pots, sugar-bowls, jugs, vases, placques and crockery in all states of age and dilapidation, beside numerous other flimsy and brittle objects of bric-a-brac, ormolu, buhl, bijouterie and vertu, which are not arranged in any order or system, but are piled up and thrown round helter-skelter, and in all sorts of confusion. To navigate safely among them, even with the present limp and clinging styles of drapery, requires great skill and circumspection, but when women envelop themselves in crinoline and go sailing about like balloons, the esthetic stuff has got to be moved or go to everlasting smash. As fashion is the ruling element in the female mind, as between hoops and blue china the latter will have to go.

Etiquette of Making Calls.

The toilet for a ceremonious visit should be quiet, but somewhat more careful and elegant than for a mere walk or drive. The lady who is receiving wears a pretty home dress of handsome silk, when it is cool enough, or in summer of dainty muslin or some soft-falling, thin fabric which suits the summer warmth. She should never wear diamonds or flowers, other than a summer rose or some such trifle stuck carelessly in belt or buttonhole.

The lady of the house always rises to receive her guest, and usually gives her hand, with some cordial expression of greeting, whether the visitor is a lady or a gentleman; but men do not usually take the initiative in shaking hands. The hostess, if possible, addresses a special remark or two to the last comer, and then, if several people are present, she tries to make the conversation general. If her guests are too numerous for this, she is at least careful to talk more or less with each one, and to see that everybody is busy and entertained. While as a rule the courtesy of a hostess should be as equally distributed as possible, it is quite allowable for her to pay special attention to any very old people who have taken the trouble to come to her, or to any one of special intellectual distinction. If, for instance, Emerson or Longfellow had honored her with a call, she would be readily pardoned for according them more than the ordinary share of her time; while to confer extra civility upon the rich merely because they are rich is a snobbishness of which a lady who respected her own ladyhood could hardly be guilty.

An introduction during a morning visit commits no one to a farther acquaintance. It is simply a means of putting two guests at ease with each other, and should always be acknowledged courteously at the time and followed by a brief chat.

In America, as in England, it is customary for residents to call on the stranger. The only American exception to this rule is in Washington—a place which has its own social code. Where two people meet pleasantly at a friend's house, one may very properly say to the other: "I hope you will come and see me;" and such an invitation should always be courteously acknowledged, and, if it is desirable to accept it, accepted without any foolish argument as to who should make the first call. It is only the people who have no confidence in themselves or in their own positions who are careful and troubled about the trifles of social life, and afraid of putting their dignity in peril by too much cordiality.

The custom of making formal visits is a necessary social tax, from the payment of which it is impossible for one holding any place in society to escape. Nine times out of ten such a visit is a bore—the tenth time may be as delightful as to chance upon a rose growing under a hedge in February. You come upon somebody who says just the right word, who gives you a fresh thought, a new inspiration, an unexpected glimpse of loveliness of character, and you go away richer and happier for the visit. But one does not every day find roses under hedge-rows, and many of our visits must come into the category of a tax which one finds little more pleasure in paying than in discharging a water rate or a gas bill, but which is just as necessary as either. It would be a sad world in which we knew no one intimately, had no warm surrounding circle of cordial friends; and to know people intimately it is first necessary to know them formally, and to this end morning visits.

A Little Small Talk.

After all, the ladies are best pleased with a bachelor President, for then the Senators' wives get a chance to play at "first lady of the land" in turn.

Chicago girls have discovered that by keeping five or six beans in the mouth the voice is given an "old, aristocratic family" accent—something between a fall down stairs and trying to sing with the head in a box.

Certain rich young men of Chicago, who possibly know more about the accumulation of money than they do of etiquette, have engraved on their visiting cards the names of the various clubs to which they belong.

Yes, girls, adopt the new fashion and curl the hair, plait it, tie in a top-knot, anything to do away with the abominable modern bangs. It is, without doubt, the most unbecoming style of hair-dressing ever invented.

A writer says that Washington ladies who carry pistols are fastidious about the mountings of the weapons, often paying as much as eighteen dollars for a tiny revolver. Some of them are good markswomen, and they have not yet furnished a single case of didn't-know-it-was-loaded.

A musician thus defines the ladies: At 15 years of age a lady is an arpeggio; at 20 years of age a lady is an allegro vivace; at 30 years of age a lady is an accordo forte; at 40 years of age a lady is an andante; at 50 years of age commences the rondo finale; at 60 years of age it is a tremolo alla sordina.

There was nothing peculiar about a recent Toronto wedding up to the point when the married couple quitted the church, then the bride dropped her husband's arm, got into her father's carriage and returned home alone. She refused to see him again, or make any explanation of her conduct.

Mrs. Jane G. Swisshelm says: "We need a standing army about as much as we need ostrich feathers." If Jane was a giddy young thing of sweet 17, or thereabout, she would say: "We need ostrich feathers ten times more than we need a standing army." Young women can worry along without a standing army, but they must have ostrich feathers.

The Pot Luck Club, composed of some 500 ladies and gentlemen, had a dinner at Irving Hall, in New York. Ice-cream was the first dish served, and entrees and roasts made up the final service. The waitresses were dressed in costumes medieval, Romanesque and Florentine, and the male waiters were a herd of young Bunthornes and Grosvenors, with flowing blonde wigs and knee-breeches. The bill of fare included in its designation "Wilde, weird, fleshly, and yet very tender, chowder," "limply clinging pie," "love-sick salad," "too-too-ti-frutti," "early English-butter-cup and daisies pudding," "soulfully intense tarts," "medieval macaroni," "amaranthine asphodel salad," "Francesca di Rimini fantasies," "fleshly," "precious" and "ecstatic" hams and "hollow-hollow pastry."

WEATHER WISDOM.

One of our prominent attorneys, who is at the same time one of the leading fishermen of the valley, claims that the weather invariably repeats itself, and gives the following as the result of his observations, viz:

All years ending in 9, 0, or 1 are extremely dry.

These ending in 2, 3, 4, 5, or 6 are extremely wet.

Those ending in 7 or 8 are ordinarily well-balanced.

Those ending in 6 have extremely cold winters.

Those ending in 2 have an early spring.

Those ending in 1 have a late spring.

Those ending in 3 and 4 are subject to great floods.—Lebanon (Pa.) Times.

When Lord Beaconsfield returned to office after his first retirement, a question arose as to making Lord Rosslyn master of buck hounds. His Lordship had, it was urged, every qualification for the post. He was a good sportsman, was especially good-looking, and would like the work. On the contrary, it was averred that he swore like nobody since the days of the army in Flanders. "Swears, does he?" quoth Dizzy. "Then we will make him Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland." And it was done.

A Judge's Experience.

Judge J. T. Bossier, of St. Tammany parish, La., and of the State Legislature, thus expressed his opinion to one of our representatives: "I have found St. Jacobs Oil to be very efficacious in sprains and bruises. In my opinion there is no oil or liniment equal to it."—New Orleans (La.) Times-Democrat.

SARAH'S COMPLIMENT.

"Gracious me!" exclaimed Sarah, looking into the glass; "how awfully my hair looks. I haven't combed it in two days."

"Why, Sarah," said Lydia, "is it possible? I never should have suspected it. It looks as well as I ever saw it."

Sarah didn't know whether to feel complimented or insulted.—Boston Transcript.

The result of my use of St. Jacobs Oil for rheumatism is:—I have been recommending it ever since, says the Mayor of Chicago, Hon. Carter H. Harrison, in the Chicago Times.

Nowadays it is impossible to listen to the conversation of half a dozen young "society" people without feeling that the American language should be more appropriately styled the American slanguage.

A Bonanza Mine

Of health is to be found in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription," to the merits of which as a remedy for female weakness and kindred affections thousands testify.

The Christian Advocate mentions the case of an Irish girl who said she joined the Methodist church "on suspicion" for six months.

"Enjoy Your Life"

Is good philosophy, but to do so you must have health. If bilious and constipated, or blood is out of order, use Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are mild, yet certain in their operation. Of all druggists.

Last words of Fontenelle: "I do not suffer, my friends, but I feel a certain difficulty in existing."

If you experience bad taste in mouth, sallowness or yellow color of skin, feel stupid and drowsy, appetite unsteady, frequent headache or dizziness, you are "bilious," and nothing will arouse your liver to action and strengthen up your system equal to Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." By druggists.

A Louisville bill collector, as he says, called upon a creditor 324 times before he got his money. Perseverance will saw a tree down with a hair pin.

CORINTH, MISS., April 2, 1877.

Capt. W. P. Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.:

Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chronic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the Liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of the bowels disappeard, and a comforable state of health was soon established. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,

D. S. MALONE.

YACHTING.

One of the most manly and satisfying pleasures, as well as the most agreeable, is yachting. The owner of the yacht is one who gathers the chief comfort, as he sails his craft fo[illegible] excit[illegible] of th[illegible]e, or [illegible] the g[illegible] en[illegible]t of [illegible]g his beautiful vessel over the water. Those who have the care, management and working of a yacht dwell almost upon the water. As a class, they are quiet, sober, careful, skilful men, but their life of exposure to the elements is productive of much rheumatism among them, and they suffer considerably from pains, the result of cold, bruises, sprains, &c. St. Jacobs Oil is a favorite remedy with these men, because of the splendid service it renders them. Captain Schmidt, of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., says that he has been a great sufferer from rheumatism for many years. He had severe rheumatic pains in nearly every portion of his body, and suffered so that at times he would be entirely unable to attend to active business. He said: "I am quite well now, however, and, as you see, I am able to work without any trouble. I attribute my recovery entirely to St. Jacobs Oil, for I felt better as soon as I commenced to use that remedy: and whenever I feel anything like rheumatism coming on, I rub the place with the Oil, and it always does what is claimed for it. Finding St. Jacobs Oil did me so much good, I got my family to use it whenever they had any pains or colds, and it has done good in every case when they have tried it. I can say that St. Jacobs Oil is a mighty good rheumatic remedy, and I don't intend to be without it." This experience is such as has been enjoyed not only by yachtsmen and others, who follow the water, but by people in every walk of life and variety of pursuit the whole world over.

From Mrs. J. V. Wellington, of Cambridgeport, Mass.

Dr. J. H. Schenck, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: Over twenty-three years ago I was attacked with a hacking cough, which continued for about three months, when I was suddenly taken with a severe hemorrhage. After this I gradually lost strength, and finally got so low as to be confined to my bed. From the first I employed what we considered the best physicians of Boston, but all to no purpose; their medicines gave me but little relief, and I felt, as did all my friends, that I had but a short time to live. In fact, the last doctor I had told my sister that I could live but a few weeks. While in this apparently hopeless condition I was visited by an uncle from California, who strongly advised me to take your remedies, saying that he had been cured of Consumption by them. My husband, who had no confidence in patent medicines, was very much opposed to my taking them, but I concluded that as my doctors could do nothing for me, I could not do better than give them a trial.

At this time your father was making professional visits to Boston, and although I was so weak that I had to be lifted into a carriage, I went to see him. He gave but little encouragement, saying that I, like many others, only came to see him after being given up by all other physicians. He promised to do what he could for me, however, and I immediately began taking the Mandrake Pills, Seaweed Tonic and Pulmonic Syrup as he directed. After using them for three weeks I began to improve, and, continuing their use for some months, I got well enough to make a visit to my friends in Philadelphia. I was so low that it took a long time to entirely recover, but I was permanently cured, for I have had excellent health for the last twenty years, with the exception of a slight weakness of the lungs, which compels me to be careful not to take cold.

Soon after my recovery, happening to meet the last physician I employed before using your medicines, he was much surprised to see me alive, but said that he could truly say that I was not the only one he knew who had been greatly benefitted by the use of your medicines.

I feel that I cannot speak two highly of your remedies, believing, as I do, that they saved my life. I have, since my recovery, recommended them to a great many people, and they have almost invariably cured them, the only exception being those who were beyond the power of all medicine. I always keep your remedies in the house, and now consider them the best of all medicines for the diseases you recommend them for.

Yours respectfully,

MRS. J. V. WELLINGTON,

12 Tremont Street, Cambridgeport, Mass.

From E. Narmandin, Jr., Esq., of Woonsocket, R. I.

Dr. Schenck & Son, Philadelphia.

Dear Sirs: I have been cured of what I believe to have been Liver Complaint in its worst form, which before I got relief, affected my lungs quite seriously. I had used the medicines prescribed by a physician of this place for a long time without benefit before I began to take your remedies. I first heard of them by your advertisement in the Patriot of this place, and concluding to use them, I purchased a bottle of Pulmonic Syrup and Seaweed Tonic. They gave me great relief, and by the time I had used them up I felt almost well. So I stopped using them for some time, but I soon found that the disease was not broken up. I then got more medicine and continued using it until I was well.

My symptoms were continuous cough, night sweats, raising of matter streaked with blood, soreness in my lungs and at the pit of my stomach, which was also very much swollen at times. I was so weak that I could not go up stairs without help, and was confined to the house for many weeks. I was very much reduced in flesh, and had no appetite, and nothing I ate seemed to digest.

Since my recovery I have recommended your medicines to a great many, among others, a lady who had what everyone supposed to be Consumption of the lungs for four years. She has entirely recovered by the use of them, and is now a strong healthy woman. I can also refer to others in this place who have been greatly benefitted by their use. Yours truly,

E. NARMANDIN, Jr.

Woonsocket, R. I., June 1st, 1881.

DR. SCHENCK'S MANDRAKE PILLS

Do not produce sickness at the stomach, nausea or griping. On the contrary, they are so mild and agreeable in their action that a person suffering with a sick headache, sour stomach or pain in the bowels, is speedily relieved of these distressing symptoms. They act directly on the liver, the organ which, when in a healthy condition, purifies the blood for the whole body.

They are a perfect preparation of that great and well-known remedy, Mandrake or Podophyllin, a remedy that has displaced the use of mercury, as well as many other poisonous drugs in the practice of every intelligent physician.

Prof. John King, of the College of Medicine, of Cincinnati, says: "In Constipation it acts upon the bowels without disposing them to subsequent costiveness. In Chronic Liver Complaint there is not its equal in the whole range of medicines, being vastly more useful than mercurial agents, arousing the liver to healthy action, increasing the flow of bile, and keeping up these actions longer than any other agent with which we are acquainted." (See American Dispensatory, page 720.)

In all cases of Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia, when there is great weakness or debility, Dr. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic should be used in connection with these Pills.

EMPTY ARMS.

God's blessing on the stalwart arms
That hold their labor duty,
And bear the burdens of the hour
With cheerfulness and beauty!

All honor to the willing arms
That lift the poor and lowly,
And teach us by their kindness
A lesson pure and holy!

And raptures for the glowing arms
That clasp with loving sweetness
A world of joy and tenderness
In beautiful completeness!

And rest unto the weary arms
That after pining sadness
Twine round our dear returning ones,
And thrill again with gladness!

But sorrow for the longing arms
Where hopes, like birds, have nested;
God's pity for the empty arms
Where darling ones have rested.

E BEAUTIES OF NATURE.

BY A. L. VAN OSDEL.

eauty of every kind is formed to cap- te, and there is this peculiar advan- in contemplating the beauties of etable nature, that we may permit hearts to be ensnared by them with- apprehension of a dangerous or dis- orable servitude. A taste for the uties of nature is one of the best ans of perpetuating innocence and ity of character. It diverts the at- tion from the turbulent scenes of hion and folly, and superinduces a cid tranquillity of the mind highly orable to the gentle virtues, and to permanency of our most refined en- ments. Rural scenes of almost every d are delightful to the mind of man. The verdant plain, the flowery mead, meandering stream and the warbling birds, are all capable of exciting emo- ns gently agreeable.

Our misfortune is that the greater tion of mankind are hurried on in career of life with too great rapidity give proper attention to the works of etable nature surrounding them.

Let them that prefer it live in the y and mingle in the busy throng, tling their way through the crowded roughfares, even though fortune at- ds them and they are permitted to be ders in the fashionable circle. Yet, ile I am permitted to penetrate ough the maze of the woodland and saunter over the farm (even though have our misfortunes and occasional- suffer pecuniary loss, caused by the aster of floods and ravages of insects), will not repine that it is not my lot to nd my leisure hours in the picture leries of a palace.

It is obvious on tuition that nature ended to please the eyes of man in r vegetable productions.

She decorates the flowers that spring beneath our feet in all the perfection external beauty. She has clothed the rden with a constant succession of va- ous hues.

From the snowdrop to the moss rose e flower garden displays an infinite riety of shapes and colors. The beauty color, though justly esteemed subor- nate to that of shape, is found to de- ht the eyes of man more immediately d more universally, but when color d shape are united in perfection, he o can view them with insensibility must ign all pretensions to delicacy of per- ption. Such a union has been usually fected by nature in the formation of a wer; in fact there is not another single ject in all the vegetable world in hich so many agreeable qualities are mbined at once; freshness, fragrancy, lor and shape. In almost every de- ription of the seats of the blessed, th ancient and modern, the idea of a rden seem to have predominated.

The word paradise itself is synony- ous with garden. The fields of ely- um, that sweet region of poesy, are orned with all that the imagination n conceive to be de delightful. Some the most pleasing passages of Mil- n's Paradise are those in which he presents the happy pair engaged in ltivating their blissful abode.

The poets have given us vivid descrip- ions of flowers and rural scenery, and hough they are thought by some to ave exceeded reality, they have scarce- y equaled it.

Enter a modern shrubbery, formed of selection of the most agreeable flower- g shrubs, composed of an intermixt- re of the lilac, the laburnum, the jas- mine, the magnolia, beside others of qual beauty, too numerous to mention, nd consider whether there is anything escribed in the Garden of Alcinous, in he Fields of Elysium or in Milton's Paradise to be compared with it. Nat- re is no less remarkable for the accur- cy and beauty of her works than for variety and profusion.

Defects are always discovered in the works of art when they are examined through a microscope; but the examination of a flower is like taking off a veil from the face of beauty.

The statement made in the inspired works of God, "that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these," may seem to the ignorant a forced expression, but it is, in fact, one beautifully true. Take Solomon's most admired purple, or take the finest fabric manufactured by the utmost ingenuity of modern skill, and, viewed through a microscope, it becomes hideous ropes and rags, while the "lily of the field," viewed through the same instrument, becomes infinitely more exquisite in its finish and beauty.

Flowers exhibit many powers and properties which the science of man has never been able to explain.

Some will instantly close up upon the slightest touch. Some will flutter, as if in alarm, upon sudden exposure to light, and some seem possessed of limited powers of locomotion. Pea blossoms always turn their backs to the wind; the heliotrope always faces the sun; the tulip opens its petals in pleasant weather and closes them during rain and darkness, and the pond-lily closes its pure white leaves at night, as it lies on its watery bed, but unfolds them again in the morning. Some open and shut at certain hours, and that so regularly as to indicate the time of day, like the sindrimal, a native plant of Hindooston, which opens at 4 o'clock in the evening and closes at 4 in the morning. Who can explain the phenomena of flowers? Who but must see that the hand and counsel of infinite wisdom are concerned in the production of these vegetable wonders?

The taste of the florist has been ridiculed as trifling, yet surely without reason, for who, upon this mundane sphere, is too wise to receive instruction from the works of nature?

Charney, the highly-gifted philosopher and statesman, while in prison by the orders of Napoleon Bonaparte, was converted from atheism into a belief in a Supreme Being by a flower. When he went into prison he did not believe there was a God. One day, as he was walking in the inclosed court or yard adjoining his cell, he discovered a tiny plant pushing its way up through a crevice in the stone floor. How it came there he could not tell. Perhaps the seed was blown over the wall by the wind. Shut in by the prison walls, away from all his friends, and not permitted to interest himself with either reading or writing, he was glad to have this little living thing to watch over and love.

With a microscope he examined the different changes in the formation of the plant. He soon saw some buds. He watched them as they grew larger and larger, and when the flowers at length came out he was filled with joy. They were exquisite in finish and beauty; had three colors in them, white, purple and rose color; and there was a delicate silvery fringe all around the edge. This serrated border in the petal of this flower displayed an accuracy of delineation which no pencil could rival; its fragrance, too, was delicious. He examined this flower more than any he had ever examined before, and the plant was something more than a mere pleasure to the prisoner. It taught him some things he had never learned before though he was a wise man. Among his scribbling on the prison wall he had written "All things come by chance." But as he watched the flower and contemplated what wisdom, what power and what benevolence had been exercised in arranging the chemical constitution and agencies of the plant, he felt convinced that it could not be the work of chance, and his faith in a world of chance being shaken, he added to the above described sentence the word "perhaps." But in time as he watched the varying changes in his flower, its phenomena, its stamens and pistils, how one contained the germ of the seed, and the other the element of fertilization, so formed as to shed that element thereon and perfect the seed, which are the appointed means to insure the reproduction of the species when the plant dies. All this convinced him that there was a Deity, and he said his little plant taught him more than he had learned from the wise men of the earth. Hence, aside from the the pleasure derived from the sight and fragrance of flowers, this illustration proves that a lesson can be taught by a single plant to the wisest men of the earth.

There is paradise in the works of nature, when we sit and contemplate the surrounding scenes and think, while this planet is cycling on ascending to the fixed laws of gravitation, endless forms most beautiful and most wonderful have been and are being evolved.

Nothing in form, function or constitution is defective in the floral creation, nothing left to chance or accident.

Fruitful lives, must flower in labor,
And the years, are like the bees,
Busy in the world of blossoms,
Building up their victories.

The Ready Letter Writer.

The third letter of the series, is that of a young man asking for the position of humorist on an English paper. It should be in about the following language:

WHITE RIVER, COLORADO,
March 1, 1882.

Editor of London Gurgle:

Dear Sir—It is with some hesitation that I address you on this occasion, relative to the subject of securing a lucrative position on your great journal as chief humorist and pun promoter.

I am aware that my experience so far has been somewhat limited in this line, but I hope by patience and a proper course of dieting to bring myself up to a point where I may establish a reputation both for myself and your paper.

I have attempted several times to hold down a like position on American journals, but so far have not made that mark which my ungovernable ambibition seems to crave. I hope to strike the popular gait in a few weeks so that in England I would have no trouble.

My jokes are of a grave and at times almost sad complexion. They are a style of grief tainted humor, which cannot but attract the kindly notice of your people.

Heretofore I have filled the position of undertakers' foreman with wonderful success and could still hold the position if I desired it, but it is too cheerful in its nature. I want something that will chasten and soften my rebellious nature. I want something that will give me a constant reminder of my dying condition. What I want is to mingle with woe and suffering. I feel as though life should not be a holiday and a picnic. It should be a groan, a shudder, or a prolonged death rattle. I am fully impressed with the idea that we can only be purified through suffering. No man can fit himself for death if he glides evenly through life.

It is therefore my desire to enter your office and be thrown in constant contact with the corpse-like presence of your jokes. I would love to mingle with the bony relics of your staff and hear their grim and awful puns.

Please do not turn me away, but give me a chance to sit in the ghostly glimmer of your smile.

I do not care for a large salary on the start. All I would require would be the wholesome contact I would be brought into with the ghouls and wreckers of human hilarity. My morbid longing for the dead and decaying humor of forgotten years would then be put at rest. This wild hunger for something acutely sad and heart-broken would be stilled.

Please write me as soon as possible, and believe me ever

Dearily yours,
SOMBER O. PALL.

MALE POCKETS.

The full-dressed male animal abounds in pockets; he has coat pockets, vest pockets, and pants pockets; breast pockets, side pockets, hind pockets, hip pockets pockets in the overcoat, his ulster and his rubber overalls; never less than sixteen to twenty of these economical hiding places for lots of articles—cash in loose change, cash in bills, lawyers' briefs, sermons, tradesmen's accounts, doctors' prescriptions, architects' drawings, tax-gatherers' blank books of all sorts and sizes, enough to stock a bookseller's stall or a merchant's counting-room. All kinds of pocket articles are enumerated and defined in the dictionary—pocket comb, pocket compass, pocket pistol, pocket money, pocket knife, pocket glass, pocket volumes, pocket inkstand, pen, pencil and the like. A school-boy's pockets are a curiosity; a repository for nails, balls, jack-knives, gingerbread and apple cores, fishing twine and angle-worms, and as he grows older, billets from the girls, "excuses", from his mother and extra problems from his teacher. A female lecturer of some celebrity said "the only thing for which she envied a man was his multitude of pockets."

A MAN in a sleeping-car on an Eastern railroad kept people awake two hours by propounding, about bed-time, the query: "What is the best thing to brush a hat with?" And the whole crowd stayed awake and guessed, and one man who came to his station, and had to get off without hearing the answer, felt awfully. And, finally, after they had all given it up, the questioner thought the best thing to brush a hat with was a hat brush. And it was painful to witness the disgust of the crowd.

IT was in Paris, and they were having their midday breakfast. One of the guests arose, and, with wine-glass in hand, said: "I drink to the health of the groom. May he see many days like this." The intention was good, but the bride looked as if something had displeased her.

HOW A WIDOW MOURNED.

She Grieved Ten Thousand Dollars' Worth at the Start, but Weakened as She Grew Older.

She was a handsome and wealthy young widow, and had just lost her husband. Full of grief over the loss of her beloved one, she sought a dealer in monuments, a friend of the dear departed. Seeing the sympathetic face of her husband's friend, the tears burst afresh from her eyes as she greeted him. "You have heard it then; George is gone."

Yes, he had heard it.

"And now," said she, "I want to get a monument, the finest and most imposing monument that you can make. I don't care for the expense. You have them costing as much as $10,000, do you not?" she ventured.

Oh, yes, he could build a splendid monument for that. He would prepare a design and submit it to her.

"You will have it ready soon, will you not?" she pleaded. "This evening?"

"No, not this evening," he replied, but he would hurry it up as fast as possible and bring it to her residence. And so it was settled, and she went away very grateful for the ready sympathy and anxiously expectant for the design.

And then the monument man got out an old design and had it transferred to a clean piece of paper, and in fifteen minutes was ready for the widow, but of course it wouldn't do to show up for a week or so. The long days dragged out their weary length finally, and the marble man, assuming an appropriately funereal countenance, sought out the widow and submitted his work. He found her somewhat more reconciled to her loss and a little inclined to be critical, but on the whole she was pleased with the design.

"But," she said, "I have been talking over the matter with my sister, and she thinks $5,000 ought to buy a very nice monument. Couldn't you make one like that for $5,000?"

"No," responded he, "but I can build quite a handsome monument for $5,000. Shall I make a design of one for that figure?"

"Yes, I wish you would, please, and I will come to your office and examine it in a week or two."

"I can make some alterations in these plans and have it ready very soon," he urged. "Indeed, I could bring it around to-morrow just as well as not."

"Oh, no; I won't trouble you to do so. There is no particular hurry about it, and I will call upon you; it's my turn, you know," and she smiled graciously upon him as she bowed him out.

Well, what was a poor monument man to do? He could only wait, and he did wait, busying himself meanwhile in getting up elaborate and really beautiful designs. One day he met the lady on the street, dressed in the merest apology for half-mourning. He bowed obsequiously and informed her that the design was finished, and he thought would not fail to be perfectly satisfactory.

"Oh," she said, "I have been so busy, don't you know, with one thing and another, that I had forgotten all about it. Let me see, how much was that to cost?"

"Five thousand dollars."

"Oh, dear, I really can't afford to pay that much. Now, couldn't you"—this very bewitchingly—"make a real nice monument for about $500? I know you can, and I will come around and see you about it real soon; good-by."

Then the monument man went to his office and told his grief to a three-legged lamb and a stone angel.

Some time after this the charming widow, with a male friend, whom she called "Charley," dropped in again.

"Do you know," she said, "I feel so ashamed to think that I never came around to look at your pretty designs. Charley and I have concluded that those great, costly ornaments are so foolish, after one's dead, you know. We think it's wicked, don't we, Charley?" Charley allowed that it was. "But," she continued, "those little white boards, such as they put at the soldiers' graves, Charley and I think they are very nice. So neat and unpretentious. Couldn't you make one of them for me and put George's monogram on it? His initials make such a pretty monogram!"

Then the monument man's cup was full, and he spilled it over on them. He told her that Charley could get an old shingle and tack one of George's business cards on it.

Then she called him "a horrid beast," and Charley spoke of whipping him "in half a [illegible]," and they sailed off.—Cincinnati Saturday Night.

SET A THIEF TO CATCH A THIEF.

That the police in Louis Philippe's time had need of honest, or even half-honest, men is proved by one of M. Claude's anecdotes. It still retains the marks of Vidocq's influence, and his moutons let loose on the scent of thieves were hardly better than the same they tracked. M. Allard was the first to do justice to the odious prejudice that in order to be well acquainted with the ways and doings of rascals one must be a bit of a scamp one's self. He rightly believed that to impress the enemies of society with respect and apprehension it was necessary to oppose to their vices an absolute example of honesty, and to face their shameless profligacy with an irreproachable line of conduct. Before Allard's time there were certain indicateurs who received with one hand their share of stolen booty, and with the other their informer's pay. It was not rare to see an indicateur breakfast on the proceeds of a theft, and sup with the money paid for its discovery. As an instance of the style in which things were done: After a considerable theft committed in the residence of a distinguished personage, all the police agents de surete were set to work to arrest the thief. He was soon taken, and at once conducted to the house he had robbed, in order to give an explanation of the way in which he had operated. Two days after the confrontation the master of the house perceived that an emerald set round with diamonds, worth 10,000 francs, had disappeared from his bedroom. The fact was communicated to one of the heads of the police de surete, who suspected that the author of the theft could be no other than one of his own agents. His object, therefore, was to discover the perpetrator of the second robbery. New Year's day was close at hand. The chief of the spy brigade assembled his men, and addressed them in a language which, if not classical, was to the purpose. "You know, my lads, we shall soon have to go and wish M. le Prefect a happy New Year. I expect you to clean yourselves up for that day, and to put on your smartest bibs and tuckers. If any of your jewelry is up the spout, or your best portable property in your uncle's keeping, you will get it away for the ceremony. I don't want you to come in a shabby turnout, as if you were only a set of mangy canaille. 'Tis all very well to go about town in deshabille, but our superior ought to see what steady and respectable coves we are. You understand me, I take the liberty of presuming. If any of you want money to get your Sunday things out of pawn, you have only to say so, and I will advance it. Allez: Be off with you; make yourselves scarce." On New Year's morning the agents, fresh rigged from top to toe, awaited their leader at the Hotel de la Prefecture. The first thing which caught the eye of that sharp-sighted genius was the stolen emerald sparkling on the suspected agent's shirt-front. "You are an ass and a booby, monsieur," he whispered, at the same time taking forcible possession of the jewel. "There are fire-eaters at the Bagne who are innocent compared with you. But I have pity on your family. Only let this teach you a lesson;" and, sticking the emerald in his own cravat with a dignity worthy of Robert Macaire, he wore it in the Prefect's presence, omitting, in the interest of his agent's honor, to restore it to its rightful owner.—London Society.

IN 1854 there were 254 daily papers published in the United States. In 1860 the number had increased to 387, in 1870 to 574, and in 1880 to 981. The circulation, which in 1850 was but 758,454, reached over 3,500,000 copies in 1880. The average circulation of the daily newspapers is placed by the census compilers at 3,704, which must reduce the actual circulation of a great many dailies far below the paying point. The average circulation of weeklies connected with dailies is 3,219, and of those not connected with dailies 1,824.

EIGHT years ago there were only $120,000 invested in steamers on the St. Johns, Fla. Now there are twenty-eight steamers plying on that river, one of which cost $240,000, and to this fleet constant additions are making. The Indian river and South Florida lakes and inlets are now dotted with sailboats, carrying freight to and fro. In a very short time these will be supplemented by steamers, and then a new region will be opened of surpassing fertility and beauty.

The Fort Payne Journal observes: Will the state convention be kind enough to turn over its business to the Selma Times and let that establishment have the nominating of candidates? Perhaps it could succeed in suiting itself in the choice. How the voters of the state would like the arrangement is a matter of no consequence.

The Selma Times is running N. H. Dawson of that place for Governor. It is to be hoped that the North Alabama delegation will take advantage of the opportunity to sit down on Mr. Dawson promptly and conclusively. It would be rough on Mr. Dawson, but it is the only effectual remedy of curing the Times of the disagreeable habit of sticking in its jaw where its advice and suggestions are neither asked nor desired.

Emigration.

We have written to the Southern Emigration and Improvement Co., in New York, giving information in regard to our fine water power, unsurpassed timber resources, and inexhaustible mineral wealth.—They are anxious to furnish industrious emigrants who so wish, with homes in the South, and we think they can certainly find as much of peace and quiet, health and happiness, in Chilton county, as in any other section of our sunny clime.

We have done what we could to induce such emigration, knowing that it would tend more to build up our county, and fill up her waste places than anything else. It depends upon the owners of land, whether such emigration will come. We would not advise our people to sell their property for a mere song; but would advise them to sell what they can spare at a reasonable price, and not hold on to it for a rise in the terms of the buyer. Such a course will be the death of any emigration movement, as has too often been the case in this and other States of the South. Emigration—increase of population—will add one hundred per cent to the taxable value of property in this county, if it can be succesfully induced, and it will be to the interest of property holders, as well as to the interest of the entire people of the county to make every effort for the introduction of a thrifty, energetic and industrious class of emigrants into our county. Let them come, and make them welcome say we.

Convict Labor.

This subject has of late been discussed at considerable length by the State press; a number of papers crying down the present system of hiring convicts, and others defending that system. The discussion, however, seems to have settled only two points, the first being that the present system is defective, and the other is that the question, 'what shall be done with our convicts?' is indeed a difficult one to to answer with satisfaction.

In the mineral regions convicts are worked in the mines under contract, at from six to eight dollars per month. Reflecting upon this, it is evident that many honest workmen are kept from seeking homes in our State, from the fact that they cannot live on the wages paid to convicts, with whom they are compelled to compete.

We spent a day in Birmingham shortly after the recent strike at Pratt Coal Mines. Convicts had been put at work to supply the places of the strikers. And this was the cause of considerable comment in the town, and of much ill feeling on the part of experienced miners, who had refused to accept the reduction in wages, and who were the leaders of the strike. One of them stated that he saw little prospect of making a living in Alabama, and would be compelled to seek employment elsewhere. When asked where he intended going, he replied, that he would probably go to Pennsylvania, that he had relatives there to whom he had written for assistance. He stated that many experienced miners in the North were anxious to remove South, owing to our excellent climate, but that convict labor had kept them from doing so.

Such is a plain statement of facts, and such a state of things is working great injury to Birmingham, by keeping away from her business men, the many thousands of dollars which otherwise would be circulated there by miners and their families; to say nothing of the injury to the State in keeping honest sons of toil from her borders.

Several remedies have been proposed to be considered by the next Legislature; the most feasible of which seems to be the plan of placing convicts at work upon the public roads. It is of course impossible to keep them confined in the penitentiary, on account of the great expense to the State; and some feasible plan must be devised by the next Legislature to place them out of the way of honest labor, and at the same time prevent them being too great a burden to the State. Recognizing this fact every county should send to the next Legislature men who may be able and competent to deal with any of the difficult questions likely to be there presented, questions upon which will depend the future greatness of our State of States.

An Odd Opinion of Ice Water.

I die two or three times a day (in "Camille"), sometimes for weeks in succession, but somehow it does not seem to affect my general health. As for myself, I am never sick. If my head aches a little I apply ice water and the pain is gone. If I take cold and my throat is sore, I dash on ice water and am well. Always ice water; it is my sovereign remedy. But I do not drink it. No. If I did I should be pale and delicate, and always ill, like some of your pretty American ladies. Do you know I believe drinking so much of this same cold, cruel ice water is what makes invalids of so many American women?

Hon. W. A. Handley, writes a patriotic letter in the Montgomery Advertiser, on our State and its future.

We learn from the Mobile Register that the schooner William White, was cleared at that port Friday, by A. C. Danner & Co., for Aransas Pass, Texas, with 233 tons of Alabama coal.

We forgot to tell our readers last week that the red-headed editor of the Eutaw Mirror went to a moonlight picnic the other night, where he managed to get on the outside of two Washington pies and three ginger-cakes, and as a result had the nightmare so bad he dreamed he had deposited sixty cents in the Eutaw bank.

La Fayette Sun: On last Thursday night Mr. Abner Webb, who resides four miles west of La Fayette, was awakened about 11 o'clock and discovered his dwelling on fire. The roof of the stove-room was falling in when first seen. As Mr. Webb had great difficulty in awakening his son William (who even lost his shoes), but few valuables were saved. The furniture, most of the wearing apparel, and all of the bedding, except one bed, was destroyed; also a bond of the Western railroad for $1,000 was burned, but as Mr. Webb has the number, a duplicate will be obtained.

Advertiser: A very unfortunate accident occurred at the King Gin Factory, in this city, yesterday afternoon. Mr. Wm. Sharp, a son of Mr. R. W. Sharp, of this city, was working at a planing machine, when some of the shafting became disarranged and a heavy wheel fell on Mr. Sharp's head. It knocked one or two holes in his head and inflicted frightful injuries. His physician has succeeded in lifting the bone from the brain, and at dark he was resting more quietly and strong hopes were entertained of his recovery. At one time yesterday it was thought death must inevitably ensue, but under careful treatment, by reason of previous good health and strong constitution, it is ardently hoped that he will get over it. The wound is a fearful one.

Jasper Eagle: At the residence of James I. Kilgore, 15 miles south of this place, on Friday, the 26th inst., James R. Kilgore shot and killed James Walker. The deceased and his slayer were young men. Mr. Walker was in the employ of Mr. Kilgore's father, James L. Kilgore, and both worked on the same farm. We learn some misunderstanding occurred between them, which terminated in a renecounter with result as above stated. Both were peaceable, quiet young men, reared in the neighborhood of the killing. The community is sadly shocked at the affair. Young Kilgore has had a preliminary trial. The justice before whom the trial was had, adjudged the killing to be manslaughter in the first degree, and held him to answer an indictment in a bond of one thousand dollars.

Washington.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—After a long, tedious, bitter struggle of two weeks, the Republican majority in the House has unseated three Democrats and seated two Republicans and one Greenbacker. Gen. Wheeler made a strong fight for his seat, and his conduct until the final vote was taken to-day appeared to indicate that he had hopes that justice of his case would induce enough Republicans to vote him to sustain him in his position. Only one Republican, however, voted for him namely, Rice of the Tenth Ohio District. The case was made up against him from the beginning, and he had no chance whatever. No more contested election cases will be tried immediately, because the elections committee has no other cases fully prepared. There are ten more cases to be tried, two from Alabama, one from Iowa, two from Maine, one from Mississippi, one from Missouri, two from South Carolina and one from Virginia.

When the contested election cases are taken up again, the first will be Smalls vs Tillman, from South Carolina, and next will be Smith vs Shelby, from Alabama. Smith is dead, but the Republicans declare the seat vacant

The two weeks' parliamentary struggle has elated and united the Republicans and embittered the Democrats. The Republicans had some of their best speakers on the elections committee, and consequently they have, from their standpoint, got some good campaigne literature before the country, The Democrats on the elections committee were able men, but not effective speakers.

The speeches of the Republicans were stump speeches for the country, and not arguments to aid in deciding the election cases.

After a few appropriation bills are disposed of, the other election cases will be taken up and more stump speeches will be made.

The Republicans are determined to carry the next Congress, if possible, and mean to do it by getting Congressmen from the South. I have it that a Cabinet officer said a day or two ago that the administration was nursing independent movements in all the Southern States, where there was any dissatisfaction in the Democratic party. Adherents to the administration in all these States are looking over the ground and keeping the leaders in Washington fully informed. Federal patronage will be used to help elect Chalmers, of Mississippi, and be used to assist any other Independent in any part of the South who will agree to support the administration if elected.

A brave boy who kept twenty Indians at bay died of his wounds at Denver, Col., a few days ago. It never happens that way in a dime novel of Indian warfare. The brave boy, in the dime novel, would have kept twenty Indians at bay, until there was not an Indian left to bay at him, and then he would have rescued and married, a beautiful white captive, with long hair kisses by the sunlight, ripe red lips, eyes of diamonds, a marble brow, and a good natured father worth $900,000. There is too much reality in the real.—Norristown Herald.

Callierville Heard From.

DEAR VIEW: Hoping these few lines may find your stock of bumble-bees exhausted, I again write you from "these diggings."

You want to make a present to your Callierville correspondent of a bee-gum hat full of bumble-bees, eh? You can stay in Clanton and talk that way, but if you come here and do it, you will be thrown into Dr. Callier's fish pond, a prey to shark and alligators, sure. By the way, the Dr. has just received a shipment of 50 German carp from Griffin, Ga. Cost $12.25 laid down. They are one year old, and from three to four inches long. He thinks if carp grow that slowly, he would have saved money to have invested in minnows and horneyhead, from the branches around Callierville. However, he had a promise two months ago from the fish commission at Washington, of some more carp. Maybe they will grow faster than Georgia carp.

Our crops are more promising than they have been in several years at this season. Our people are cheerful.

Gregory & Coe will soon have their saw mill in running order, one mile above us. There is a dearth in the lumber market now.

Half a dozen or more of Selma's merchants will erect summer residences here. We are glad. We need energetic working men to build up society and Sunday Schools. We have material for a good school and society, but lack a leader.

Who will be elected to legislate for Chilton? Don't all speak at once. Let us elect some good man who does not seek the office.

I like the ring of our Congressman's metal, he has never offered himself a candidate. Ex-Governor Watts had better have left that letter unwritten, offering himself for the U. S. Senate. Morgan is the pride of the South, as well as of Alabama. I wonder who our delegates will vote for for Governor? We are sorry Hargrove has come down. Our delegate, T. D. Parnell, will be on time.

LOOK OUT FOR SQUALLS.

Calera News.

Two young bloods had a fisticuff at the railroad crossing the other night. No "stagger-juice," no blood and no harm done.

Mr. J. M. Saudridge, of New Orleans, spent a day last week examining the mineral specimens of Mr. Chas. Werdman. He was surprised at their number and quality and carried a good number with him to have analysed. He intends to invest in these minerals, if the chemist finds they are as valuable as they appear to be.

John Boyd, of Clear Creek, was in Calera, last Saturday.

New wheat can be bought in Shelby county, for $1.25 a bushel. This is two and a half cents cheaper than it sold for in Chicago last Friday.

Dr. R. N. Hawkins was nominated for the lower house of the legislature by the Democratic Convention of Shelby county, last Saturday. This was a most fortunate selection, both for the people and the party. There will be no opposition.

The oat and wheat crops of this vicinity have been harvested, and an abundant yield secured. The corn crop never, in the memory of the oldest inhabitant looked so well, and the cotton crop is recovering from damages of the late cold spell. Verily, this year will be one of great abundance.

RUFUS.

The new mail route has been established between Maplesville and Columbiana via Clanton, and three new postoffices will probably be established along the route. One at Mullin's, in the northeastern part of the county, has already been petitioned for. One should be established at Sloss' Mines, and another at Benson, which can be done during the present Congressional session, if petitions are sent at once to our representative, Hon. Thos. Williams, who was instrumental in getting the route established for our people.

The catalogue of Moore, Moore & Handley, Dealers in Engines, Saw Mills, and Machinery of all kinds, is on our table. This is a number one house, and deserves success. Birmingham is where they are located.

Jemison and Environs.

Listen! Hear that organ?

Cool north breezes for the season. It seems more like October than June. Fine weather for work and judging from the smiling faces of farmers, the crop prospect is most encouraging.

Mrs. W. A Jones, left last Thursday, to visit her parents, who reside at Hanceville, Blount county. She will probably be absent for a week or more.

Miss Lillie Luckett, of Talladega, is visiting her sister, Mrs. C. H. Smith. We wish for her a pleasant stay, which we hope may be extended for some weeks, at least.

Miss Sallie Patton, of Siluria, Shelby county, is visiting Dr. J. A. McNeill's family. Miss Patton has been an invalid we learn for years. It is to be hoped that the pure freestone water and health-inspiring mountain breezes for which Jemison is famous may prove beneficial to her.

Mr. S. P. Luckett, who has been behind the counter at Bandy & Allen's for some months past, left us last Tuesday for Verbena, where he will be engaged during the summer. His many friends in Jemison regret very much to see him leave. He will be sadly missed, by more than the "choir," of which he was a punctual and valued member. Success to Syd! Call and see Miss S. P. A. occasionally; and we hope to get a peep at you in passing. Mr. G. W. Dawson, was elected by the Sunday School to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Luckett as Secretary.

The Jemison Sunday School, represented by two of her fairest and best, Misses Lizzie Langford and Sudie Allen, and aided by generous friends, has purchased for itself a new Shoninger organ, which was received last week. Of course the school hailed its arrival with delight; and the choir—well—they were wild with rapturous ecstacy. The Sabbath School and community owe a debt of lasting gratitude to the young ladies who were the originators of the work.

DOCEO.

Maplesville Dots.

Everything as quiet as John Brown's grave, in these parts, and news as scarce as government bonds.

Good rain last week, and crops are looking well. Field peas are in demand and scarce at good prices.

Mr. Hugh Foshee, Clanton's crack shot, has been amusing himself shooting bats. He killed 23 in twenty-five shots.

We have at least three organs and want to suggest that that the enterprising gents get up a concert.

BIJOU.

Influence of Newspapers.

A school teacher who had been engaged a long time in the profession, and witnessed the influence of a newspaper upon the minds of families and children, writes as follows:

I have found it to be a universal fact, without exception, that scholars, of both sexes and of all ages, who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are:

1. Better readers, excellent in pronunciation, and consequently read more understandingly.

2. They are better spellers, and define words with ease and accuracy.

3. They obtain practical knowledge of Geography in almost half the time it requires of others, as the newspapers have made them acquainted with the location of the important places, of nations, their governments and doings on the globe.

4. They are better grammarians for having become so familiar with every variety of styles in the newspapers, from the commonplace advertisement, to the finished and classical oration of the statesman, they more readily comprehend the meaning of the text, and constantly analyze its construction with accuracy.

5. They write better compositions, using better language, containing more thought, more clearly and thoughtfully expressed.

6. Those young men who have for years been readers of newspapers, always are taking the lead in debating societies, exhibiting a more extensive knowledge upon a greater variety of subjects, and expressing their views with greater fluency, clearness and correctness.

William Miles, of Lynnville, Tennessee, was bound to be revenged on his wife for obtaining a divorce and marrying again while he was in the penitentiary. He accordingly married the daughter of his wife's second husband, his own step daughter. He thus became his own step son, his wife's brother, his own father, son of his old wife and brother to his father-in-law.

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
TradeMark
FOR
SOLD IN A YEAR
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.
A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.
Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by TIGERS.

The tiger may be taken as the supreme type of the pure wild beast. Life has only one end for him—enjoyment; and to this he gives all his magnificent energies. Endowed with superb capabilities, he exercises them to the utmost in this one direction, without ever forgetting for an instant that he is only a huge cat, or flying in the face of nature by pretending to be anything else.

Speed, strength and cunning are his in a degree to which in the same combination no other animal can lay claim; in daring none exceed him, while for physical beauty he has absolutely no rival. A tiger has been known to spring over a wall five feet high into a cattle inclosure, and to jump back again with a full-grown animal in its jaws, and has been seen to leap, holding a bullock, across a wide ditch. As regards its speed, the first bounds of a tiger are so rapid as to bring it alongside the antelope; while for strength, a single blow of its paw will stun a charging bull. Its stealth may be illustrated by the anecdote of the tiger carrying away the bait while the sportsmen were actually busy putting up the shelters from which they intended to shoot it "when it came;" and its daring by the fact that numbers do not appal it, that it will single out and carry off a man out of the middle of a party, and that it regularly helps itself to cattle in broad daylight, in full sight of [illegible] herdsmen or the whole village. I have not gone for my illustrations to any traveler's tale, but to records of [illegible] shikar that are absolutely beyond [illegible]cion. To enable it to achieve such feats as these nature has created in the tiger the very ideal of brute symmetry and power. The paws, moreover, are fitted with large soft pads, which enable this bulky animal to move without a rustle over ground where the lizard can hardly stir without being heard, while its coloring, though it seems conspicuous enough when seen behind and against a [illegible] ground of whitewash, assimilates with astonishing exactness to its surroundings when the tiger lies in ambush under the overhanging roots, or crouches among the cane-grass.

For the tiger makes no pretense to invincible courage. On the contrary, he prefers, as a rule, to enjoy life rather than die heroically. When death is inevitable, he is always heroic, or even when danger presses him too closely. But if he can, he avoids the unequal contest between brute courage and explosive shells, and makes off at once for more sequestered woodlands, where he can reign supreme, and be at ease. It is indeed a splendid life that this autocrat of the jungle leads.—Harper's Weekly.

HOW ALCOHOL IS MADE.

When barley or other grain is steeped in water till it sprouts, and then, carefully dried, it becomes what is termed malt. By this process part of the starch of which the grain is mostly composed has been converted into sugar, and a new substance has been developed, known as a diastase, a nitrogenous body, which immediately, when the malt is mixed with water, reacts on the remaining starch and transforms it also into sugar, the liquid consequently soon assuming a sweet taste. We have now, in fact, a solution of sugar, which is known as wort; but we may attain the same by using unmalted grain—potatoes, peas, beans or other starchy materials which, by the addition of dilute sulphuric acid, is converted into a soluble sugar. Having thus obtained a solution of sugar from any of these sources, or still more directly from beet root or "toothsome cane," yeast is added to the wort, and the process of "fermentation" is rapidly set up by which the sugar is decomposed into two chief products, alcohol and carbonic acid gas, and several minor ones, glycerine, succinic acid, etc., ninety-five out of every hundred parts of sugar being transformed into alcohol and carbonic acid, four parts going to form glycerine, etc., and one part as nourishment to the yeast plant, which has multiplied immensely, and now forms a frothy scum upon the surface of the liquid. By the fermentation spirits have been produced, and the object of the next process, the distillation of the fermented wort or mash, is to separate the spirits from the liquid in which it exists. The produce of this operation is an impure spirit known as "low wines," which has to be redistilled at a lower temperature to get rid of part of the water and oils with which it is contaminated, the product of this second distillation being the mixture of alcohol and water known as "whisky" or "spirits of wine," because it was by the distillation of wine that spirits were first obtained.

THE GENIUS OF KRUPP.

Alfred Krupp, the owner and creator of the largest gun foundry in the world, seems to be a greater hero in war-loving Germany than the Chancellor himself. Krupp was born at Essen on April 11, 1811, and, as his father was a gunmaker, the boy made toys of firearms. The lad's genius outstripped all precedent, and, more than keeping pace with modern invention, he devised implements of death which have terrorized soldiers of nearly every nation.

THE BLACK BEAR'S CUNNING.

I really think that Bruin possesses the sense of humor; at all events his actions point that way, and there is no doubt that he is extremely cunning and observing. I once had an English friend visiting me, who played the flute. He was in the habit of marching up and down, while playing, near a tame bear I had at the time. The bear had a piece of stick about two feet long, which he tossed about for amusement. After a time, he came to handle the stick very much as my friend did his flute. This annoyed my sensitive friend, and in revenge he teased the bear with uncouth noises. Bruin sniffed and whined, and waited his opportunity for delivering a tremendous blow with his paw at his enemy, whose tall hat was knocked completely over his eyes. He escaped being scalped by dropping flat and rolling out of the reach of the bear. This bear spent much of his time in the tree to which he was chained, and when climbing usually got his chain twisted over and under the branches in a most intricate manner, but never failed to take out every turn as he descended. A friend who owned a tame bear told me that, for a long time, he could not account for the mysterious way in which the poultry disappeared. Observing, at different times, a good many feathers around Bruin's pole, he began to suspect that the bear was the culprit. Close watching confirmed his suspicions. When Bruin thought he was unobserved, he would seize any unfortunate hen or chicken within his reach and devour it; but if any one approached before he could complete the meal, he would sit upon his prey until the danger of discovery had passed. He was betrayed, at last, by the cackling of an old hen that he failed to silence.—Charles C. Ward, in Century Magazine.

ELECTRICITY IN THE HUMAN BODY.

Most people are familiar with the "spark" which may be produced under certain conditions by stroking the fur of a cat; and travelers in Canada and other cold, dry countries have witnessed the still more remarkable phenomenon of the human body being turned into a conductor of electricity and the possibility of lighting the gas by merely [illegible]ing one's finger—given the necessary condition of electrical excitement—near [illegible] jet, without any other agency.

Mr. A. W. Murcheson, the African traveler, gives some more startling facts. He states that, one evening, when striking an African native in a moment of anger, with a cowhide whip, he was astonished to see sparks produced, and more surprised to find that the natives themselves were quite accustomed to the phenomenon.

He subsequently found that a very light touch, repeated several times under certain conditions of bodily excitement and in certain states of the atmosphere, would produce a succession of sparks from the bodies of native men as well as from native cattle. A lazy negro, it seems, yielded none of these signs of electricity—a rather unfortunate circumstance for his more active brethren, who may possibly come in for a share of undeserved flogging from the hands of future travelers in search of electrical phenomena among the human race. We are not aware that these facts have been recorded by other travelers, but they deserve thorough sifting by competent observers.—Anon.

"THE SUPERLATIVE" AT PUBLIC DINNERS.

I once attended a dinner given to a great state functionary by functionaries—men of law, state and trade. The guest was a great man in his own country, and an honored diplomatist in this. His health was drunk with some acknowledgment of his distinguished services to both countries, and followed by nine cold hurrahs. There was the vicious superlative. Then the great official spoke and beat his breast, and declared that he should remember this honor to the latest moment of his existence. He was answered again by officials. Pity, thought I, they should lie so about their keen sensibility to the nine cold hurrahs and to the commonplace compliment of a dinner. Men of the world value truth, in proportion to their ability, not by its sacredness, but for its convenience. Of such, especially of diplomatists, one has a right to expect wit and ingenuity to avoid the lie, if they must comply with the form. Now, I had been present, a little before, in the country at a cattle-show dinner, which followed an agricultural discourse delivered by a farmer; the discourse, to say the truth, was bad; and one of our village fathers gave at the dinner this toast: "The orator of the day: his subject deserves the attention of every farmer." The caution of the toast did honor to our village father. I wish great lords and diplomatists had as much respect for truth.—Ralph Waldo Emerson, in the Century.

THE RAILROAD MAN AND THE MISSIONARY.

Two young and aspiring railroad men, who were placed on the retired list owing to the consolidation of Gould's Southwestern roads, expressed themselves rather emphatically, and in language that shocked the feelings of a missionary who was sitting close by listening to the remarks. He stood it as long as he could, but finally he lost his patience, and walked up to the two young railroad men and reprimanded them for using such profane language.

"You ought to know," he said in conclusion, "that there are but two roads, one leading to Hell and Damnation, and the other to Joy and Salvation; now which one of these would you rather take?"

"Well," replied one of the railroad men, after getting over his surprise in being thus addressed, "I don't think I'll take either, for it is ten to one that the two roads will fall into the hands of Gould and be consolidated before I get there."

The missionary made no further efforts to convert the heathen and left disgusted.

A MINISTER'S DAUGHTER.

Mr. Spurgeon tells a story of an American minister who thought he heard his daughters talking scandal in a harsh manner with some visitors, and after their friends had gone he opened the door and reproved them. "But, father," they answered, "what shall we talk about? We must talk of something." "If you can do nothing else, get a pumpkin and roll it about," he answered. Not long after, the girls heard an association of ministers at their house getting very much excited, and almost losing their temper. The eldest daughter got a pumpkin and took it into the room, saying, "There, father, roll it about."

A MORE EXCELLENT WAY.

"I suppose I might as well destroy this," said the tailor, disconsolately, to his wife, taking up a bill due him from one of the deacons of the church to which they belonged.

"Not a bit of it," returned his wife "Give it to me."

The next Sunday morning, when the plate was passed round for subscriptions to pay off the floating debt, she dropped the bill into it, and before the middle of the week it was paid.

Capt. W. P. Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.:

Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chronic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the Liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of the bowels disappeard, and a comforable state of health was soon established. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,

D. S. MALONE.

A Surprised Locomotive
—AND—
A Swearing Engineer.

The people along the line of railway from Tramway Landing, La., to the inland towns were surprised and amused at a recent occurrence. So many strange things, however, are constantly presenting themselves to the attention of the people now-a-days that genuine surprises are few indeed. This was the exception. We have read of the "painted ship on a painted ocean," and witnessed the "poetry of motion," as shown in dancing, but had never heard of decorative art in rapid flight on a railway train until this time. People observed, with wide-eyed wonder, the locomotive and tender and full train of cars moving through the country, adorned on every available spot with the magical words—"St. Jacobs Oil!" It looked gorgeous, if full display of color is allowed to mean anything these times. It looked sublime, if the impudence of the advertising man be the measuring standard. It looked funny to see the train and engine swathed with these parti-colored rheumatic wrappings; and at a convenient opportunity our correspondent inquired of the conductor what it all meant.

Typical Western Girls.

The Misses Kollock are four typical Western girls. The family of W. E. and A. M. Kollock, of Madison, Wis., consists of seven members, four of whom are sisters. Of these Dr. Mary Kollock Bennett, the eldest, graduated at the Women's Medical College of Chicago, and for many years has been practicing successfully in that city. The next, Dr. Harriet Kollock, graduated in the medical department at Ann Arbor, Mich., nine years ago, since which time she has been eminently successful in her professional work. The third, the Rev. Florence Kollock, graduated at Canton Theological College some years since, and is now doing a good work as pastor in a beautiful church, built for her by her parish, at Englewood, a fine suburban town of Chicago. Dr. Jennie C. Kollock, the youngest sister, graduated in the dental department of Ann Arbor, Mich., together with a class of thirty-six gentlemen, she being the only lady, and passing the highest examination of any in the class. She is now establishing herself successfully as a dental practitioner in Chicago.

Talks with Tired Housekeepers.

The amount of labor performed by the majority of farmers' wives at the present day is appalling. Sometimes we sigh for the good old times of the past. To be sure our grandmothers worked; but they knew little or nothing of the hundreds of perplexing cares that wear out the life of the young wife and mother of the present day. Hurry and worry kill more than work. The plain, stout, home-spun suits our grandparents were clothed in were very different from the flimsy, tucked, ruffled and embroidered suits that the little ones to-day are arrayed in.

There comes before my mind as I write the care-worn faces of many disheartened housekeepers. Day after day passes, but still there is plenty of work on hand that ought to be done; in fact, it always seems to be increasing. The house must be kept perfectly clean, for dirt in the house is a sin(?). The children must be kept looking "as well as other people's." The husband is too poor to hire help in the house, and ten chances to one the poor wife has to bear burdens that rightfully belong to him to bear. He does not mean to be unkind, but he does not know the pain she suffers in silence, and he cannot realize the weakness which makes her work a burden. And so the years glide on, until mind and body can bear up under the fearful strain no longer. Then the toil-worn hands are folded, the throbbing, burning brain becomes calm and cool, and the sufferer is laid to rest—rest at last.

All unnecessary work is wrong It is as much your duty to rest when you feel the need of it as is to work when you do not. There is a great deal of work done which never ought to be; it may seem necessary, but experience will teach you, if you will allow it to, that it is not. Constantly dwelling upon the one subject of house-work, the mind becomes morbidly sensitive, and trifles will rear themselves into mountains. This is a fact experience has taught me. The more work you do the more you will see to do. The more you brush and scour the more dirt you will see. There is a time to stop, and happy are they who know the time.—Kara Kyle.

Color and Dress.

Color is an immense factor in dress at the present and a very fair test of the amount of art and culture which a woman puts into her clothing, or at least how far she keeps en rapport with the most recent ideas in making her selection. Art and esthetic ideas in dress have done much for us by introducing a new world of color, a world of meaning, of depth of expression such as of late years, previous to this era, we knew nothing. If any one wishes to be convinced of the truth of this statement let him compare the fine-art shades in the materials of to-day with those of ten, fifteen and twenty-five years ago. Every year the improvement is manifest and the shades or tones develop a more subtle consciousness, a growing character which contains possibilities of harmonious relations with the persons and influences with which it is brought in contact, of whom and of which it is destined to become a part.

Take green, for example: There is no color so significant, so capable of tender, helpful, growing expression. It is in the subdued art shades universally becoming; and it fraternizes with more colors than any other except those that do not quarrel because of their fixed and eternal neutrality. Who does not remember what were called the "grass" greens and "apple" greens of a few years ago? They were the greens of paper flags on St. Patrick's day! Put these greens by the greens of grass and leaves, even at their brightest, and one will be astonished at the quiet depth, the delicacy and subdued character of the natural tint—the immense difference between what we call nature and what is nature.

The esthetic school have tried to get rid of the entire system of crude color, substituting for it the refinement of subdued tones—such colors as are found upon old china, tapestry and needle work; and, to a certain extent, they have succeeded. The best English and French manufacturers have been glad to adopt ideas which had all the attraction of novelty and all the force of tradition. Particularly where atmospheric influences are favorable colors have been lowered, deepened and the general tone greatly improved. In this country it is more difficult to create a new departure of this kind, because the climate lacks the humidity and tenderness necessary to the production of the most perfect dyes; secondly, because the policy of the country is to sustain its manufactures, not to improve its manufactures.

Our art colors are therefore confined to imported fabrics and materials, and the price puts them out of the reach of any but the rich, or at least those who can afford luxuries. Still, one good effect has been produced; our manufacturers have been stimulated to the production of variety in color and to attempts at imitation.—Jenny June.

Small Talk.

MUCH learning shows how little mortal knows.

DOES a girl cudgel her brains every time she bangs her hair?

"MY wife," remarked Fitznoodle, "is fairly crazy over the fashions. She's got the delirium trimmins."

"AN honest man is the noblest work of God." Nothing is said about an honest woman, because she isn't such an astounding variety.

"MY daughter," exclaimed a fashionable mother, "is innocence itself. You can't say anything in her presence that will make her blush."

HENS scratch up flower beds only when they are barefooted. That's why women run out and "shoo" the hens to keep 'em from doing damage.

A GEORGIA woman offered to bet four pairs of socks against a dollar in cash that she could count 1,000,000 in half a day. Her jaw gave out in two hours.

"WHAT is meant by the pomps and vanities of this world?" asked the Sunday-school teacher. "Them flowers on your hat, mum," replied the quick-witted scholar.

"YOU are weak," said a woman to her son, who was remonstrating against her marrying again. "Yes, mother," he replied, "I am so weak that I can't go a stepfather."

IT'S funny, but a soft-palmed woman can pass a hot pie-plate to her nearest neighbor at the table with a smile as sweet as distilled honey, while a man with a hand as horny as a crocodile's back will drop it to the floor and howl around like a Sioux Indian at a scalp-dance.

UNDER the laws of the pilgrim fathers a man could not kiss his wife on Sunday, and, after a somewhat critical examination of portraits of wives of those days, we think the laws were eminently just, if not in the main lenient. The pilgrim fathers should have been fined for kissing such homely wives any day in the week.—New Haven Register.

EQUAL to the emergency: Mrs. Ponsonby de Tomkyns: "That lady was evidently intended by nature for a Chinese, Sir Charles. I wonder who she can be?" Sir Charles: "She happens to be my sister, Lady Plantagenet de la Zouch. May I ask why you think nature intended her for a Chinese?" Mrs. Ponsonby de Tomkyns: "She struck me as having such exquisitely small feet!" —London Punch.

LIFE ON THE STAGE.

Actors and actresses are proverbially long lived and free from bodily infirmity. Performances are seldom changed through the illness of the performers. In many theaters a season has passed without a single alteration, even of a part, from illness.

This healthiness is attributed to the necessarily active life of actors, and to the regular exercise, not only of the limbs, but also of the internal organs of the throat and lungs, thereby fortifying the weakest portion of the system.

Actors who have resisted the great temptation of their calling to intemperance have reached the very longest term of human life.

Of all classes they are the freest from crime. This is owing mainly to their constant occupation of mind, time and body in their pursuit; but it may be also attributed to their softness of feeling and sympathy of character. They are charitable almost to recklessness in their efforts to relieve suffering.—New York Mail.

EMERSON'S TRIBUTE TO THE FARMER.

The following worthy tribute to the farmer is from the pen of Ralph Waldo Emerson:

The glory of the farmer is that in the division of labor it is his part to create; all trade rests at last on his primitive activity. He stands close to nature; he obtains from the earth the bread and meat; the food which was not he causes to be.

The first farmer was the first man, and all historic nobility rests on possession and use of land. The farmer's office is precise and important, but you must not try to paint him in rose colors. You cannot make pretty compliments to fate and gravitation, whose minister he is. He represents the necessities. It is the beauty of the great economy of the world that makes his comeliness. He bends to the order of the seasons, the weather, the soil and crops as the sails of the ship bend to the wind. He represents continuous hard labor year after year and small gains.

He takes the pace of seasons, plants and chemistry. Nature never hurries; atom by atom, little by little she achieves her work. The farmer ties himself to nature, and acquires that livelong patience which belongs only to her. He must wait for his crops to grow.

His entertainments, his liberties and his spending must be on a farmer's scale —not a merchant's. It were as false for farmers to use a wholesale and massy expense as for States to use minute economy.

He has great trusts confided to him. In the great household of nature the farmer stands at the door of the bread-room, and weighs each loaf. It is for him to say if men shall marry or not. Early marriages and the number of births are indissolubly connected with an abundance of food. The farmer is a hoarded capital of health, as the farm is of wealth, and it is from him that the health and power, moral and intellectual, of the cities come. The city is always recruited from the country. The men in cities, who are centers of energy, the driving-wheels of trade, and the women of beauty and genius—are the children and grandchildren of the farmer, and are spending the energies which their fathers' hardy, silent life accumulated in frosty furrows.

He is a continuous benefactor. He who digs a well, constructs a stone foundation, plants an orchard, builds a durable house, reclaims a swamp, or so much as puts a stone seat by the wayside, makes the land so far lovely and desirable, makes a fortune which he cannot carry away with him, but which is useful to his country long afterward. * * *

Who are the farmer's servants? Geology and chemistry, the quarry of the air, the water of the brook, the lightning of the cloud, the casting of the worms, the plow of the frost. Long before he was born the sun of ages decomposed the rocks, mellowed his land, soaked it with light and heat, covered it with vegetable film, then with forests, and accumulated the sphagrum whose decays made the peat of his meadow.

A MARRIAGE PORTION FOR HIS WIDOW.

A gentleman of this county, whose name was not given, called upon a prominent lawyer of this city to write his will, and in the devise to his wife he added a clause that if she should marry again then the property devised to her should be for her sole and separate use, free from the control of her husband, but giving her the right to dispose of it by will or otherwise as she pleased. It was simply providing for his wife as most prudent fathers provide for their daughters. He made a marriage contract for her provided she made a marriage for herself. This is hardly as liberal, but quite as wise, as the case of the Frenchman who left his wife a double portion provided she married again, as marriage would entail a greater expense upon her than if she lived single.—Lexington (Ky.) Press.

WHEN Mr. Edmunds had just been elected to the Senate from Vermont a member asked Senator Collamer what kind of a man his new colleague was. "A very able man," was the answer. "A very sharp-sighted man. Why, he can see a fly on a barn door, two miles off, with perfect distinctness—and not see the door."

DURING the temporary absence of the proprietor of the Sheridan (Neb.) Post, parties entered the office and issued a holiday edition that stirred things up pretty generally in that place.

AN AMBUSH OF ARTILLERY.

We were driven back at Seven Pines the first day, but on the second we gave them a little "Hail Columbia," and drove them back in return about half a mile from where our outside line was established on the first day. It was a most terrible fight. I had never seen anything like it, and as I have never seen an account of a rebel charge made that day I will undertake to briefly describe it. On a wooded eminence a short distance below where our first line had been established two or three batteries of artillery were stationed by Heintzelman. One section of two pieces was drawn out from the wood and placed in the clear corn field beyond. It was rather a dangerous position for a battery to be in without support. The section had scarcely unlimbered when from the woods in their front there debouched four lines of Confederates (Cheatham's brigade), who, in regimental front and four lines deep, came pouring down upon the devoted section. "Fire with canister!" commanded the weak little voice of the young Lieutenant who commanded the section, and the Confederates seemed to laugh at the two little six-pounders opposing them. "Double-shot with canister!" said the commander of the masked guns in the woods, and still the enemy came on and on, as if on parade. Not a musket was fired, and the section kept booming away with terrible rapidity. I had thought that the Lieutenant and his section would turn tail to the foe. He did not, but stood there and worked his guns with the coolness of a brave man. All at once, with a yell, the enemy started on a double-quick, and in a moment more the section was captured and the Lieutenant was a mangled corpse. Now came the most terrible carnage I had ever seen. The capture of the section had evidently greatly encouraged the foe, and his lines swept up and up the hill until within about a hundred yards of the Union cannon. It was a magnificent sight. The lines had not broken yet, but kept onward as marching for review. "Fire!" rang out from the woods, and at least a dozen cannon belched forth their storm of death. I can see it even now. Men in all the agonies of death piled like fence rails one upon another, with their more fortunate comrades climbing over their mangled bodies to reach the guns. The magnificent lines of a moment before wavered, then stood still, and then faded away like snow beneath the summer's sun. The charge was ended, and but few, if any, lived to return. The field where the enemy had advanced was a perfect slaughter-pen, indeed. The dead and wounded lay in all directions, and not one of all the men who had advanced got back again. It was a gallant charge, and to the noble and brave Lieutenant who commanded the section alone in the field, and who gave up his life to duty, was the credit of winning the battle due. The enemy lost about 1,500 men in killed, wounded and prisoners. Our loss was eight men killed and sixteen wounded.—Philadelphia Weekly Times.

RODERIGO HAD FORGOTTEN.

"Will she never come?" he muttered in low, earnest tones; "never come to hear the sweet words of love that are waiting on my lips for her?" A fish rose to the surface of the brook, looked at the young man and went away tired. "I will seek her," he said; but as he turned to go a pair of gleaming arms were thrown around his neck and two rosy lips were puckered up for a kiss. "So you have come at last," he said, looking at her fondly. "Yes," replied the girl. "Birdie McMurtry never breaks a promise. I told mamma that she would have to hang out the clothes herself to-day, although it nearly broke my heart to leave her at such a time." "Great heavens!" said Roderigo to himself, "I had forgotten that it was Monday."—Chicago Tribune.

A CAUTIOUS EDITOR.

The religious welfare of Greenville, Ala., is jealously guarded by the Echo. A new theater was to be opened with "Richelieu," and the cautious editor, while admitting that the play was regarded as tolerably moral, felt it his duty to add: "We are so utterly ignorant of everything in this line, having never informed ourselves upon the subject, that we are entirely unable to make any positive assertion one way or the other. This notice was allowed to enter our columns with the express understanding that we are constitutionally and religiously opposed to theaters. We have only announced—all go at their own risk."

The Democratic Ticket.

The convention of delegates from the several counties met in Montgomery, on last Wednesday, for the purpose of nominating a ticket for the various State offices to be filled by the August election. The ticket which the convention presents to the people contains the names of E. A. O'Neal, of Lauderdale, for Governor; Ellis Phelan, of Jefferson, for Secretary of State; I. H. Vincent, of Chambers, for Treasurer; H. C. Tompkins, of Bullock, for Attorney-General; J. M. Carmichael, of Dale, for Auditor; and H C. Armstrong, of Macon, for Superintendent of Education. Each of these gentleman has become experienced in the offices mentioned, with the exception of the two first named.

Gen. O'Neal, the nominee for the Governorship, is a citizen of Florence. Besides having enjoyed for many years, a wide reputation as an able lawyer, he is further known to the people of the entire South, as a soldier, serving in their cause unwaveringly, without fear and without reproach, and as a member of the staff of Gen. Lee, during the late struggle between the States. It is safe to say that he will make a faithful servant of the people. Maj. Phelan, of Birmingham, is widely known over the State. He was for several years clerk of the House of Representatives, has the reputation of being a good lawyer, and will no doubt make a most efficient Secretary of State. Of the other gentleman composing the ticket, it is unnecessary to speak, as the merits of each have been tested by faithful service. The ticket has been favorably received throughout the State, and an exchange says of it: "The ticket is unceptionable.—With the exception of the candidates for Governor and Secretary of State, they have been tested by experience. The Democrats of Alabama will rally to their support, and an overwhelming majority is a certainty."

The Columbus and Western.

Our Calera correspondent writes us that the C. & W. railroad is now destined to reach Tuskaloosa instead of Birmingham. The surveyors of the route were at Calera last Saturday, and stated that greater advantages were expected to accrue to the road by its being built to Tuskaloosa than by the other route. This will be good news to Tuskaloosians and to other portions of the State as well. Tuskaloosa has of late awakened to the realization of the great advantages which she posesses and during the past year has exhibited commendable enterprise and thrift among her citizens; and just in proportion as she continues in her progressive movements, will she reap her reward in seeing new enterprises seeking her doors and new fields opened for a future greatness which is destined to be hers sooner or later; and if she does her duty her greatness will not be far distant.

Our Railroads.

Of the South & North Alabama Railroad, the Railroad Commission in its report, published last week, says:

The condition of this line has been greatly improved over that of last year, and is now in good condition as regards its track and bridges. The passenger and freight accommodations at all local stations are ample, and their condition improved over that of last year. At several stations no freight rates were posted as required. Public road-crossings are in good order, but no warning signs are erected as required. Rolling stock on this line belongs to the L. and N. R. R., in good order and equipped with modern improvements.

Of the Selma, Rome & Dalton road, now operated by the East Tenn. Virginia & Georgia company it says:

The condition of this line as regards its track and bridges over that of last year, is very greatly improved, and will compare favorably with the best roads in the State. There have been some few changes in its depot facilities and accommodations, and as a general result, some improvement has been reached. Three new depots have been built, one each at Burnsville, Dixie and Ashby. At all other stations the passenger and freight accommodations remain the same as last year and are ample, except at Talladega, Cross Plains, Ladiga and Ambersonville. At Talladega, two waiting rooms should be provided. At Cross Plains the depot building is private property; ample for freight purposes but provided with no passenger accommodations. At Ladiga and Ambersonville, the depot buildings are totally unfit for use. The passenger accommodations are poorly kept as a general thing. Rates generally posted. Public road crossings in good order, and warning signs erected as required by law. Rolling stock in good order and equipped with all modern improvements.

Weather has improved. We are now having bright warm days, and our crops are growing finely.

We think that a better plan of managing convicts, would be for the State to buy farms and work them under the supervision of skillful planters. By this plan, we believe that the State would get more revenue and the convicts more humane treatment. There are not enough convicts to work all of the public roads in the State, and too much expense and dissatisfaction would arise in distributing them over the State.

Mrs. A. L. Salmonds of Green Pond, A. G. S. railroad, is visiting relatives in this vicinity. We wish her a pleasant stay.

Your Calliervillian can draw on us for any number of leaders that he may need. In fact we have more leaders than followers, and would be glad to exchange with him.

Now that the State ticket is out politics have become the sole topic even in this rural community. Yesterday several of our prominent citizens were here, to bore our delegate and express surprise at Dawson's defeat. We never heard of O'Neal before the convention. We are in favor of William's reelection, and regret that any Alabamian should enter the field in opposition to Gen. Morgan, who has given this State more prominence in national politics than any man since the days of William R. King. BIJOU.

From Strasburg.

EDITOR CHILTON VIEW: Dear Sir—The inhabitants of Strasburg are unwilling to allow her facilities to remain longer unknown. We claim to be up with our neighbors in the various productions of the county. We have a fine piney soil, and with the assistance of the proper fertilizers, we can safely rely on our hog and hominy. I send you as a proof of this a specimen of oats raised in this neighborhood, by Mr. J. W. Maddox. The height of stalk is four feet one inch, the length of head, 18 inches. It is a specimen from a field which will yield an average of twenty-five bushels to the acre. How will this do for old piney land?

Mr. Heath has just finished a splendid bathing house, which he has built over one of the coolest springs in the country.

We invite parties seeking health, good society, and cooling breezes to visit Strasburg, for here they will find each and all. Yours,

Strasburg, June 10. J. G.

A fine illustration of the futility of duelling as a means of settling difficulties and taking vengeance on a foe, is afforded by the late affair of Parker and Burke, respectively of the New Orleans Picayune and Times-Democrat. The Picayune made certain charges against the official integrity of Mr. Burke, and its editor, C. H Parker, received a challenge from the valliant Burke. The fight came off, and on the fifth round, Burke fell, shot through the legs. The code of honor was adhered to throughout, and the matter is presumably at an end. Burke is bound to feel relieved. The stain upon his honor has been wiped out—and in his own blood. Such is vengeance. Parker, having bagged his game, has reason to think the Gods were with him, and has nailed his charge to the legs of his victim.

The duel has proved absolutely nothing. Burke is neither more innocent nor guilty than he was before, and the outside world has not had one ray of light shed on the matter. Mr. Burke now has the advantage of most of his fellow citizens in being able to know which is worse, wounded honor or wounded legs.

Value of Character.

Mr. W. H. Baldwin recently delivered an address before a body of young men in Brookline, Mass., which is especially valuable on account of the speaker's long association with the interests of young people. "The brave young man," said the speaker, "is the one who stands boldly up in the presence of companions and positively refuses to do that which his conscience tells him is wrong, when tempted as so many young men are, and so very often. He is the brave young man who has the courage to say 'No,' or to say 'Yes'—decisions which shall be at the same time based upon the prompt action of his God-given conscience, the great guide and dictator which God has so kindly given to each and every child of His creation. The coward is the young man who cannot, or rather does not, stand the presence of evil companions or friends who tempt and urge him, and who, though he knows what is right, is weak, has not the moral courage he should possess; in fact, he is the coward."

A military company should be organized in Clanton to prevent destruction to property in case of strikes among miners, now here. [illegible] It should not be [illegible] the last moment.

[illegible] who was shot by [illegible] some weeks since, was arrested and jailed last week, [illegible] a warrant issued upon the [illegible] of Foshee. He has had a relapse and is now in a very critical condition, though hopes are entertained of his recovery.

A dance at the courthouse tomorrow evening.

On the morrow there will be at least one happy man in Clanton. His name is W. J. S. We can tell more about it next week.

There are said to be three great phases of a woman's life, viz: As a baby she is lugged, as a maiden she is hugged, as a wife she is humbugged.

The entertainment which was to come off at Verbena about the last of the month, we learn, has been indefinitely postponed, owing to unforeseen circumstances.

No less than six white men were arrested by U. S. Deputy Marshals, and carried to Montgomery, yesterday morning. They were all arrested on the same charge—removing timber from government land.

We return thanks for an invitation to attend an "Elocutionary Entertainment," by the pupils of Miss Griffin's school, at McDonald's Opera House, Montgomery, on Friday, 16th inst.

Mr. Alfred Baker, Jr., who was arrested and carried to Montgomery by U. S. Marshals, last week, charged with cutting and removing government timber, had a hearing before the U. S. Commissioner, on Wednesday, and was discharged.

The protracted meeting which has for some weeks been going on at the M. E. Church at this place, closed on last Monday evening. The Pastor, Rev. J. W. Shores has been assisted by Rev. Messrs. Montgomery and Carmichael, of Clanton, and Rev. Mr. Baine, of Calera. The meeting resulted in four applications for church membership.

A match game of base ball is to be played at Calera, on Friday, 23d inst., between the "Chilton View" club of Clanton and the "Hirscher" club, of Columbiana. Columbiana has a fine club, but it will have to do some tall playing to beat our Clanton boys. And by the way—our thanks—we suppose are dubbly due, since they have dubbed their club in honor of the CHILTON VIEW.

A programme of the closing exercises of Clanton Academy will be published next week. This month closes the first session of this excellent institution. In its accomplished principal, our community possesses a citizen in whom her people have a just pride. The school fully deservers the wide reputation and usefulness, which, under his excellent management it has attained, and we trust that its next session will find it doing still more in the cause of educating the rising generation.

A general strike took place at Sloss' iron mines, four miles northeast of Clanton on last Friday. About forty negro men are employed in the mines, and they have been working eleven hours a day. They struck for a shortening of the time to ten hours. We learn that some few of the strikers have returned to work. The others have scattered over the county, and one of them was arrested in Verbena, on Tuesday morning, and was brought to Clanton and jailed on a charge of larceny. We understand that threats were made by the strikers against the few who returned to work, but that they were prevented from carrying out their threats by the mine overseers, who had resource to the shot-gun argument.

Calera News.

A vein of coal was struck two miles from Calera, last week, by some parties who were digging a well.

Capt. W. H. Lee authorizes us to say that he will have every thing in readiness for the Clanton and Columbiana boys on Friday, 23d inst. He will also have seats and an arbor for the comfort of ladies who wish to witness the game.

Calera will certainly have another railroad. The surveyors from Shelby Iron Works reached Calera last Saturday. When this is completed there will be only fourteen miles to grade between Calera and Goodwater in Coosa county. It is now an almost assured fact that the Columbus and Western will go to Tuskaloosa instead of Birmingham.

Geo. Holdridge and John Boyd, of Clear Creek two good citizens of Chilton county, were in Calera last Saturday. RUFUS.

15 000 THE PASTILLE PACKAGES

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

SOLD IN A YEAR

AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

SCHOOLS OF THE CIRCUS.

When, at the beginning of an exhibition season, after passing the manager's inspection, an athlete of any kind gets into the ring, he represents a vast amount of hard and thoughtful labor and instruction. He has been in "winter quarters," of some kind, but he has also been at "school," and the younger he is, the more he has had to endure from exacting and often severe teachers. The larger shows and more enterprising showmen often set up "schools" of their own, connected, it may be, with the establishments wherein they keep and train their quadruped performers.

In every such school of the circus, there is a good deal of machinery, as well as an experienced professor of the art of doing impossible things. There are kept on hand every kind of gymnastic apparatus for the developt men of activity and muscular strength. These latter vary, of course, with the nature of the lessons the pupil is learning, and at last he is confronted with the very things he is to employ in the presence of watching crowds.

By the pitiless severity meted out to all needless failures made in the presence of his exacting trainer, the "school-master," he is made to understand at an early day that he must never make a failure in the presence of paying spectators.

The trainer represents the keen-eyed public, and also the demands of his employer, the manager, and he must give a good account of the time and money expended upon the school. If any boy should be seized with a "fever" to distinguish himself in the "ring," nothing would be so likely to cure him as a week or so under a careful and faithful teacher in a winter school for the circus. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, the scholar would forever afterward be contented to remain outside the rope circle. —W. O. Stoddard, in St. Nicholas.

RUM FROM OLD SHOES.

Old shoes are used for three purposes. First, all shoes not completely worn out are patched, greased, and, after being otherwise regenerated, sold to men who deal in such wares. Some persons wear one shoe much more than the other; these dealers find mates for shoes whose original mates are past hope. Secondly, the shoes not worth patching up are cut into pieces; the good bits are used for patching other shoes, and the worthless bits, the soles and cracked "uppers" are converted into Jamaica rum by a process known only to the manufacturers. It is said that they are boiled in pure spirits and allowed to stand for a few weeks, the product far surpassing the Jamaica rum made with essence, burnt sugar and spirits. A gentleman who doubted the truth of this story stopped recently at a low grog shop in the neighborhood of the factory spoken of and inquired if they had any rum from old shoes. "No," said the barkeeper, "we don't keep it much now; the druggists, who want a pure article, all sell it, and the price has gone up. But we have had it, and we can get you some if you want it." How many old shoes go to a gallon of rum could not be ascertained.—Philadelphia Record.

"Picture conundrum," is a game which requires no apparatus but a pencil and a slip of paper. The first player draws a picture and folds the slip so as to hide it. The second writes a guess as to what the picture is; the third does the same, and when all have written the list is read aloud.

A DANGEROUS THREAT.

"Well, sir," he said in a big gruff voice as he walked in on the editor at his desk, "are you the miserable half-slice of humanity that wrote that article about me in your filthy dishrag of a newspaper?"

"Ah," answered the editor looking up from his work smilingly, "good morning, sir, did I understand you to say anything?"

"Yes, sir, you did."

"Ah, what was it?"

"Why, sir, I said was you the miserable half-slice of humanity that wrote that article about me in your filthy dishrag of a newspaper?"

"Ah, I beg your pardon. I understand. I am that party."

"Well, then, get ready to go. I propose, sir, to mop up the floor with you, to wipe down the walls, to clean the windows, to sweep off the stairs; in fact, sir, I propose to bankrupt your entire anatomy, physiology and hygiene! Are you ready?"

"Hold on, my dear sir! Before you begin, will you tell me your name, age, place of birth, name of father and mother, how long you have lived in this place, your business, when married, how many children, member of what church, if any, religious convictions, number of brothers, and——"

"What do you want all that for? Are you a census man? I want to depopulate you, sir, and decimate your ranks, sir! That's what I want!"

"Don't be too rapid. You see after you get through with me I think you will need an obituary notice for this evening's paper, so I thought I'd get all the particulars, and have it in shape, so we could scoop the other papers on a full and exclusive report. You see, my friend, there's nothing like enterprise in this business. I've got two dozen scoops and two dozen obituary notices in full filed away, and you will make the twenty-fifth. Now, sail in, old man, and let's get done with it before time to go to press. Sail in, right quick, please."

But the stranger didn't sail in, he sailed away, and, as the editor resumed his work, he drew in a long breath and remarked: "A lie is a present help in every time of editorial trouble, but, by the great paste pot of Jupiter, I don't believe I was ever quite so bad scared in my life before." Then the click click of the type setter and the scratch scratch of the pencil went on like the soft, sweet music of the rippling waves of Gallilee.

THE WATER OF A HOLY WELL.

Prof. Franklin not long ago sent a letter to the London Times on the quality of a well regarded as sacred by Mohammedan pilgrims. The water appears to be worse than that of many wells not considered sacred, but we hope our readers will take warning from this extreme instance of well pollution, and consider that it does not require contamination seven times worse than sewage to send typhoid and cholera into the houses of Christians, however it may be with the Mohammedans.

Prof. Franklin says: "The well is in Mecca; the water is regarded as holy, and large quantities are annually sent as gifts to all Mussulman countries. Most of the Mohammedan princes, especially those of India, have 'keepers of the well,' whose duty it is to send them annually water from the well.

"I have analyzed this water and find it to be of the most abominable character. In fact, it is sewage more than seven times as concentrated as London sewage, and containing no less than 579 grains of solid matter per gallon. Knowing the composition of this water, and the mode of propagation of Asiatic cholera by excrementitious matter, it is not to be wondered at that outbreak of this disease should often occur among pilgrims to Mecca, while it would scarcely be possible to provide a more effective means for the distribution of cholera poison throughout Mohammedan countries."

THE DECREASE OF VILLAGES.

The last census showed the decrease of the population in villages in the United States. This same decrease is now deplored in England. It is said that people congregate in towns, because life in town is really more decent, more agreeable and more profitable. We should like to know the test of the argument. There is some truth in it, and that lies in the two words, "public opinion." Public opinion makes many people respectable that otherwise would not be so; they dare not give way to indulgences because the public eye is upon them, when they would freely do so, were no such correcting medium about. Then the homes of country people are so poor and wretched often, that they prefer the sound walls of a tenement house to the tumble-down shanty of a village, and would rather live in close quarters with others than drag out their days in miserable loneliness. The congregating of human beings is one of the great features of the coming generation.

MISTAKING LIMBURGER CHEESE FOR A SMALL-POX [illegible]

When Hoffenstein entered the store there was a look in his eyes which plainly told that something had happened him, and his clerk, noticing it, said:

"Vat's de matter, Misder Hoffenstein? You don't look vell dis morning."

"Noding, Sherman," he replied, "but a brivate citizen dot can haf any rights mitout some beople making objections, you know. I vas arrested by the bolice yesterday!"

"Arrested, Mr. Hoffenstein?" "Yes, und it vas all about dis small-pox pisiness vat is is going around. Ven I goes home yesterday efening I buys a cake of Limburg cheese, puts it in my market basket, und den I gets in a street car vat vas crowded mit beople who vas all dalking uf de small-pox. Shust dink uf it, Herman, a brivate citizen don't can haf any brivileges in de town, you know."—New Orleans Times.

THE HEAD-LINER.

The professor of journalism, who periodically tells us all about newspapers, has failed to notice a comparatively modern and a very important feature of the newspaper, namely, the head-lines. This is a department of the paper which has steadily conquered for itself an influence which every newspaper manager sometimes inadequately recognizes. It often happens that the ingenious artist in this department is really editing the paper. He can convey an impression which the writers of ponderous leaders are endeavoring to avoid. He can create a doubt or awaken suspicion by a single artfully chosen word or sow broadcast an opinion which it may take columns of writing to show is unfounded. Suggestions that are buried in the body of articles may attract no attention, but the flaming head-line takes the eye at once, and its diagnosis of the matter which it criticizes may be very wide of the mark without the average reader applying any corrective. The head-line largely regulates the emphasis that is given to the report of current events. Small matters in this way may be magnified, and mere conjectures invested with nearly the dignity of established facts. —Toronto Mail.

It has been discovered that under the law retired volunteer officers have a right to wear their army uniforms, and it is argued that the custom would pleasingly diversify the black-coated array of men on full-dress occasions. A GOOD REASON FOR HIGH PRICES

A Philadelphia gentleman traveling abroad writes that he and a friend stopped at a small cafe in the suburbs of Paris for refreshments. Their repast was a light one, consisting of tea, toast and eggs, but the bill was a heavy one, nine francs in all.

"Garcon!" exclaimed one of the tourists, "how's this? Please explain."

"Well, you see, messieurs," apologizes the waiter, "two francs for the tea and toast and seven francs for the eggs."

"Ah, then eggs are very scarce about here?"

"Non, monsieur, eggs are not scarce, but Americans are!"—Progress.

Rubbing It Out.

The editor of the Courier, Mr. W. F. Cook, was seized a few months ago by a terrible pain in the left shoulder and neck. Having been favorably impressed for some time with the virtue of an article recommended for all sudden pains, and especially rheumatism, we rubbed the offending part, and in less time than we write it, relief came. That article is St. Jacobs Oil.—Canajoharie (N. Y.) Courier.

A Matter of Interest.

A medicine must of necessity stand upon its merits. If it does not possess healing qualities of value to suffering humanity, no amount of advertising will prevent its being branded a fraud by the public. Among the proprietary medicines advertised in the papers there are none that hold a higher rank than those of The Dr. Harter Medicine Company, St. Louis. Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic is winning spicial favor, each bottle used proving its wonderful beneficent effets, an advertisement which sells many additional bottles. The testimonials which the Dr. Harter Company are able to produce in proof of the merits of their medicine will convert the most suspicious to its use. Read their advertisement, and if suffering from any of the diseases mentioned write to them, or ask your druggist for their medicines.

Capt. W. P. Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.

Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chronic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of my bowels rapidly disappeared, and a comfortable state of health soon establised. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,
D. S. MALONE.

Time Testers and Burden Bearers.

From time immemorial the horse has been man's best friend. But a few years back we can all remember the comparatively little attention paid to this most indispensable of animals. We say comparatively little attention, for the horse was as well groomed, and certainly as well fed as now; and at those great gatherings—agricultural shows—you would see the pride of the county and State stables and farms assembled. But there was a conspicuous want of noble draught horses, and as for speeders—well, 2:40 was the great ultimate limit that owners in those days desired to strive for. But now a 2:40 animal is esteemed a fair roadster, and fine animals only deserve the name when they can shade the first quarter of the third minute. There have been immense strides forward in the right development of horseflesh in the civilized countries of the world, as shown by the time records of the racers and draught capacity of the humbler, but really more useful, work-horse. Many things have conspired to effect this desirable end, chief among which have been the intelligent care and consideration bestowed upon the animal in his every relation—in a word, upon the breeding. And this has not failed to include a very serious modification of the old methods of treatment, doing away, in many cases, with the inhuman and really savage plans pursued in the eradication of even simple disorders and ailments, and substituting rational measures of relief instead. A prominent factor of this reform, and one indorsed by owners, breeders, farmers and stockmen the country over, is St. Jacobs Oil, recognized by all who have used it as an exceptionally good remedy for the ailments of the horse and stock generally, meeting more indications for its use and effecting far better results than any article of a curative or remedial nature ever introduced. Such breeders and horsemen as Aristides Welch, Esq., of Erdenheim, near Philadelphia; Mike Goodin, Esq., Belmont Park, Pa.; Calvin M. Priest, formerly in charge of Mr. Robert Bonner's stock, New York; and thousands of others throughout the country, who could be named, are on the list of unqualified endorsers of the efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil.

Pretty maid of Annex fame,
How did you get the measles?
Was it in the Fine-Arts room
Among the busts and easels?

Was it peradventure in
The hall of German eight,
Or in Chemistry, perhaps,
Or from a tete-a-tete?

Or have you a worshiper—
Some Junior, let me say—
Who caught them from some friend of his
And gave them both away?

I know not, pretty Annex maid,
But if you have a lover,
For his sake and your own I hope
That you may soon recover.

How Beauty Is Rated in Texas.

The young men have a way in Texas of rating the girls as they do cotton. If only moderate in style and appearance she is a good ordinary, if more than usually attractive she is a good middling, but if superior in all the graces and charms, then she is the highest grade—middling fair. Further West, in the cattle region, she is a long horn if only of moderate beauty, but a short horn if of superior quality.—St. Louis Republican.

Story of a Hat.

'Twas at the concert. She came barcarolling down the aisle, with that motion of hips and arms peculiar to Boston, which is the quintessence of a homely gait. He had carelessly left a new silk hat in her seat. She sat on it, rose in dismay, reached for her purse and offered him an X. He refused, but requested to kiss her hand. She refused also.

"Then," said he, "I will accept the $10, and say I preferred it to kissing you."—Harvard Lampoon.

A Startling Costume.

We trust that none of our American belles will follow the latest freak of fashion exhibited at the races at Nice by a fascinating Parisian actress. This adventurous young lady appeared on the course in a toilet of light-colored Cicilienne, embroidered in a most artistic manner with life-sized cats arranged around the skirt. The bodice was plain, with paniers, and at the back the material was so draped that two tabbies came face to face, and seemed to be engaged in mauling each other in the most improved back-yard fashion. The effect was startling, to say the least, and we venture to say that the wearer was eminently successful in creating a sensation.—New York Tribune.

A Man's Choice.

"Now whoever saw an old-gold rose?" she cried, appealing to the mirror, "or black asters, or brown lilies of the valley, or pea-green chrysanthemums? It's just like a man! Not the least idea of taste! And they'll put anything on to him. Probably some old things they had left over from last year, and then stuck them together on a child's hat, and told Jack it was the latest style! And he believed them, the ninny! It's just like him! Well, he may wear it if he wants to, I shan't."

Jack arrived at this juncture, his face beaming like a bran-new tin pan in the noonday sunshine. Seeing the millinery in the hands of his helpmate, he exclaimed gleefully:

"So you've got it, Mary! A little surprise, you know. It's a stunner, ain't it?"

"I should say it was, Mr. Jack."

It was the tone of these words rather than their intrinsic intelligence that caused Jack's face to elongate so suddenly.

"Why, what's the matter, Mary?" he exclaimed in alarm.

"Matter, Mr. Jack!" returned Mary, holding the bonnet out at arm's length, as if it had been a recent occupant of the small-pox hospital. "Matter, Mr. Jack!" she repeated; "I should think you'd ask! Just look at it!"

"Why," said Jack, beginning to lose confidence in his ideas on taste, "isn't it pretty?"

"Pretty!" screeched Mrs. J.

With that she let the millinery fall from her grasp, and then dropped all in a heap on the nearest chair, and fell to weeping like a force pump.

It was hard on poor Jack. He had promised himself no end of pleasure as the result of his little surprise. "Mary will be so happy!" he had said to himself. "It will come so unexpected, too! And how she will admire my taste!" Instead of this, that beautiful bonnet lay neglected on the floor, and his wife was on the verge of hysterics!

What was he to do under these distressing circumstances? Do? What would any husband do in the presence of tears?

"Oh, well, Mary," he said, coaxingly, "if it doesn't suit you, of course you can change it. I ought to have known that a man isn't fitted to pick out a bonnet. There, dear, don't cry any more; but put on your things and go right down to Plushington's and pick one out yourself. Now don't cry, dear. I've got to go to the office; but you'll go to Plushington's right away, won't you, dear?"

Mrs. Jack's tears gradually dried, though a great sob every now and then showed the terrible anguish which still rent her bosom. She deigned no answer to her lord's entreaties, excepting something or other about that "horrid thing," and was about to break out again into fresh weeping, when Jack begged her again to go to the milliner's right off, kissed her hastily and discreetly left her alone with her grief. When the door was safely shut behind him—the truth must be told—he did say something that rhymed with lamb, but it is certain that "lamb" was not the word he used.

It was wonderful how quickly Mrs. Jack recovered from her sorrow. Hardly had the street door closed ere she was herself again. There was now a look of triumph on her face. Hastily putting on her street garments, she shoved the despised bonnet into the band-box, and a minute later was on her way to Plushington's.

It is needless to follow her thither. If you are a woman, you know how a woman disports herself in a millinery shop; if a man, the less you know about such places the better for your peace of mind.

The next day was Sunday, Easter Sunday, and as Mrs. Jack walked down the broad aisle in her new bonnet—the bonnet of her own choice—she was supremely happy. And Jack was happy, too, to see his spouse in so heavenly a frame of mind.

"Well, I vum!"

Thus said Mrs. Jack, as she took her seat; for right in front of her, in the Bangupton pew, there sat Mrs. Bangupton—the recognized leader in the fashionable world—with a bonnet the very counterpart of that "horrid thing" which Jack had sent home as a surprise to Mrs. J.

This is what Mrs. J. "vummed" about.

There were the identical neutral strings; the nondescript roses, chrysanthemums, lilies and asters were all there; the "mean, scrimpy, night-cappy thing" was before her in every particular.

It is safe to say that Mrs. Jack got little edification from the service that morning. Mrs. Bangupton's bonnet was mixed up with the hymns; it was everywhere throughout the creed, collects, prayers; the morning lessons were entirely devoted to millinery; the sermon, from text to finish, was Bangupton and bonnet; and the text was made up of the same ubiquitous elements.

On her way home Mrs. Jack was not so cheerful as when she started thence. On the contrary she was taciturn, sad, not to say morose. Jack saw that something was wrong, but, being a discreet husband, and having yesterday's episode fresh in his remembrance, he said nothing. It was, no doubt, the wiser course.

Upon reaching home, Mrs. Jack flew up the stairs, but not until she was in the solitude of her own chamber did her sorrow find words. Clutching convulsively at the strings of her new bonnet, she pulled it off and then sank into a chair and burst into tears.

"I don't care, there!"

This was her only exclamation. She continued to weep and sob for five minutes, perhaps. Then suddenly she dried her eyes, took up her bonnet, scanned it all over, and, with a look of satisfaction rather than of joy, exclaimed:

"Well, I picked it out myself, at any rate! None of his buying! I'd a died rather than have him buy my bonnet!"

And no doubt she would.—Boston Transcript.

Small Talk.

OHIO claims the heaviest woman in the world. She weighs 491 pounds.

A GREAT modiste issues the following directions for a new-style head-gear: "With this bonnet the mouth is worn slightly open."

A MISSOURI girl wrote 2,378 words on a postal-card, and then mailed it without any address. The family didn't get any rest that night.

CHICAGO had a "paper party" the other day, with both men and women dressed more or less completely in the fragile material. There were no bad accidents reported.

A VENETIAN glass manufacturer is fabricating ladies' bonnets by the thousands, and selling them, too. The glass cloth of which they are made is shinier than silk, has a finer color, and is none the worse for a heavy shower of rain.

PIGEONS are now used in Paris as ornaments for bonnets. At last a ray of light appears. When this fashion gets to this country a woman can snap her fingers at the milliners and merely send her husband out to shoot one of the neighbor's pigeons.

A WELL-DRESSED and good-looking young woman entered a grocery store in Quincy, and called for a nickel's worth of eggs. The clerk gave her four eggs, and they were devoured on the spot by the suction process. The young woman then wiped her mouth and walked off.

OF the Princess of Wales, the coming Queen, it is said: "Her tender care and solicitude for her children are so well known that her example has made it fashionable among titled ladies to affect a fondness for the presence and society of their children, who otherwise would be left to the care and companionship of servants."

AT a late fashionable dinner party in New York, the dinner cards were in imitation of fans, and made of different woods, the back being used to form a frame around the edge. On the handles were pretty bows of satin ribbon, and on each fan was painted the name of the guest and an appropriate design by a well-known artist.

MISS BYRNES, of San Francisco, recently sued a barber for the value of a switch he had furnished her. The barber agreed to work over the combings of her own hair, but, as a matter of fact, she claimed, he furnished her with an inferior article. His lawyer asked her if it was not a better switch than she could have got in the city for the same money. "I'll show you, Judge," she answered, with a bewitching smile, "but I will not let him see." She laid aside her hat and draped her head with the switch. "Now, can't you see for yourself, Judge, it doesn't match my hair at all?" His Honor moved back a little, looked over his spectacles around the room, then at the defendant, then at the lovely plaintiff kneeling before him, and stammered out: "The court renders judgment in her favor for $25."

POE AND THE ENGLISH POETS.

It is particularly irritating to the Americans to be told that, after so many generations of accomplished and vigorous writers, the poetry of Edgar Poe still remains the most individual poetic product to which the United States have given birth. This is annoying, and they escape it by a direct negation—Mr. Henry James, the typical literary American, even venturing to speak of Poe's "very valueless verses." Such men as Mr. James ask us if we are sincere in preferring these light tones of music to the intellectual force and severity of Bryant, to the humanity of Longfellow, to the wit of Holmes and Lowell. To this there seems an answer which will hardly satisfy any but those who have made poetry their principal study. These will have perceived that in the history of the world what has really preserved the memories of writers of verse has not been intellectual force, or the clear expression of love and pity, or even wit, but a certain indefinable felicity of style; a power of saying things as they never were said before, and so that they can never be forgotten. It is a very remarkable thing that Edgar Poe, who was not a man of much weight of character, or even originality of intellect, yet happened to possess, to a very high degree, this extraordinary gift of style. In this no American poet has so much as approached him, and it is probable that this will preserve his verse, like a rose petal in a drop of glycerine, bound to decay because of its ephemeral and disconnected condition, yet never actually decaying.

Here in England, where every unprejudiced thinker must admit that poetry has flourished since the beginning of the century far more than in America, Edgar Poe has taken his place as one of the fashioners of style. Whether his influence has been altogether beneficial may perhaps be a matter of reasonable doubt. But his influence is not to be doubted. Long ago Mr. Tennyson came under the sway of his music; Mr. Matthew Arnold, in the "New Sirens," and Mr. Rosetti, in more than one piece of structural melody, have felt it; Mr. Swinburne, though he has so thoroughly conquered the notes and made them his own, would scarcely have begun as he did without "Ulalume" and the "Conqueror Worm." But the English writer who has most closely resembled Edgar Poe in his mournful and mortuary temper, though he wore his rue with a difference, was the late Mr. Arthur O'Shaughnessy, whose "Fountain of Tears," and "Barcarolle" threw more light on the structure and value of Poe's verses than pages of the cleverest criticism. In France, where the cadence and the verbal felicity were lost, the influence of Poe, which was so strong for a little time, seems to have faded away. We do not hear now of the gentleman who was spending years and years on a translation of "The Raven," and whose version was expected by his friends to be a greater masterpiece than the original Baudelaire's beautiful paraphrases and commentaries, in which he managed, while retaining the essential characteristics of Poe's work, to infuse a strong quality of his own, will always be of interest to students of literature.—Pall Mall Gazette.

POROSITY OF MATTER.

That granite is porous is shown by placing a piece of it in a vessel of water under the receiver of an air-pump and removing the air. Little bubbles will soon be seen rising through the water. These bubbles are the air contained in the invisible pores of the granite. A piece of iron is made smaller by hammering. This proves its porosity. Its particles could not be brought into closer contact if there were no interstices between them. An experiment performed some years ago at Florence, Italy, to ascertain whether water could be compressed, proved that gold is porous. A violent pressure was brought to bear on a hollow sphere of gold filled with water. The water made its way through the gold and appeared on the outside of the sphere. Water will thus pass through pores not more than one-half of the millionth of an inch in diameter.

INFANT FOOD.

There are about twenty European preparations styled infant foods, beginning with that of Nestle, and at least twice as many American, all of which profess to furnish a complete nutrition for the infant during the first few months of its existence, while yet the conversion of starch into dextrine and sugar is beyond the capacity of the untrained digestive function. The examination of these with a microscope, assisted by such simple tests as iodine, which turns starch cells blue, and gluten (or albuminous) granules yellow, has engaged the careful attention of Dr. Ephraim Cutter, of Cambridge, and his results will startle most mothers who have relied upon the extravagant pretenses set forth in the circulars of manufacturers. Eliza McDonough, who preceded Dr. Cutter in this field, has been in a measure discredited; but it appears that her assertion—that the starch, so far from being transformed into dextrine, was not sufficiently altered to render the recognition of its source difficult, whether from wheat, rye, corn or barley—was strictly true, and that these pretentious foods are, without exception, nearly valueless for dietetic purposes. All of them consist of baked flour mainly, either alone or mixed with sugar, milk or salts. In some cases the baking has been very inadequately performed, and the doctor found one that consisted merely of wheat and oats whose starch cells were proximately in their natural condition. The general result of Dr. Cutter's examination may be stated in brief terms as follows: There was scarcely a single one of the so-called infant foods that contained a quantity of gluten as large as that contained in ordinary wheat flour. That is to say, a well-compounded wheat gruel is superior to any of them, particularly when boiled with a little milk; and mothers are in error who place the slightest dependence upon them. As respects one very expensive article, professing to possess 270 parts in every 1,000 of phosphatic salts in connection with gluten, Dr. Cutter was unable to find any gluten at all. The thing was nearly pure starch sold at an exorbitant price as a nerve and brain food, and a great remedy for rickets. So all through the list. Sometimes a trace of gluten was present; more frequently none at all. In one case there were ninety parts of starch to ten of gluten; but this was exceptional, and the majority were less valuable, ounce for ounce, than ordinary wheat flour. Considering the semi-philanthropic pretensions which have been put forth by the manufacturers of these foods, some of them sustained by the certificates of eminent physicians, the report of Dr. Cutter is one of the dreariest comments upon human nature that has recently fallen under the notice of the journalist. But if the revelations he has made of fraud and pretense on the part of manufacturers in this field shall serve to protect mothers from further betrayal, and to rescue infant life from quack articles of nutriment, his work, though giving a tremendous shock to our sensibilities and to our faith in medical certificates, will not have been done in vain.—New York Times.

DRINKING WATER.

No sensible person need be told that pure water is as essential to good health as pure air, and we can not be too careful of that part of this most necessary article of domestic economy to be used in cooking and for drinking. Water has an immense absorbing capacity, and the colder it is the greater the facility with which it takes up impure gases. An open vessel of water will render the air of a room purer, but the water itself will, in a few hours, be rendered totally unfit for use by reason of the fact that most all the carbonic-acid gas and ammonia, the result of respired gases, is taken up by it. Hence, water for cooking or drinking should, if kept inside, be in tightly-covered vessels. Where well or cistern water is used the better plan is to keep the drinking pail on the outside.

Certain it is that no prudent housewife, knowing these facts, will use water that has stood uncovered, for any length of time, in an occupied room. When studying cleanliness and ventilation do not forget the important adjunct to comfort and health—pure water.

FROM time immemorial hairpins have been accused of various idiosyncrasies, but never, until lately, of actual crime. This mediocre record has recently been varied in Manchester, England, where a hairpin has been found guilty of murder in the first degree. A woman lay down upon her bed to sleep, and presently awoke a corpse, to all intents and purposes, for she lived only a few moments. An examination showed that a hairpin had been driven more than two inches into her brain.

Platform of Principles and Policy of the Democratic Party of Alabama.

The following is the platform of the principles and policy adopted by the late Democratic State Convention:

Resolved, by the Democratic and Conservative party of Alabama, in Convention assembled:

1. That we reaffirm our devotion to the time-honored principles of the Democratic party; a strict construction of the Federal Constitution, obedience to the laws of the General Government within constitutional limits, and maintain the right of the State to regulate its local affairs by its own authority.

2. We are unalterably opposed to the continued acts of the Federal authorities tending to centralization of all power in the General Government to the destruction of local self-government.

3. We present the record of the administration of our State's affairs while in control of the Democratic party as an earnest of the fidelity of the party to the principles of economy and good government. We invite immigration and capital to our State, and pledge full and perfect protection to all such as may come among us.

4. That public education should be fostered and encouraged by the State as far as the means of the State will allow, having at the same time due regard to the preservation of the public credit.

5. We recognize the necessity of protecting and preserving the purity of the ballot box as the safeguard of free institutions, and condemn any attempt to interfere with the free and full exercise of the elective franchise.

6. That the Executive Committee be requested to prepare and issue an address to the people of the State.

A Plan to Unseat More Democrats.

A telegram from Washington says: A considerable number of the Republicans in Congress favor an attempt to put through half a dozen more election cases, seating Republicans in place of Democrats. It will be good politics they say. They hold that it will stimulate Democratic bolting in the South, in the hope that the Republicans will seat the bolter, if he can make any kind of a show, in preference to the regular Democratic candidate. They hold, also, that in nine cases out of ten the bolter, thus seated, will work with the Republicans. The prospect is that toward the close of the session, when the House is full and the chances for a quorum are good, an extensive firing out of Democrats and seating of Republican contestants will be attempted.

Not only a majority in the next Congress, but the majority of the States as represented in the next Congress, is at stake; for it is not impossible the next Presidential election will be decided by the House of Representatives. It is to be observed that the newly seated members are pronounced Arthur men.

Geo. I. Seney said: "If any one asks you why I gave so much money to the Wesleyan Female College, of Georgia, tell them it was to honor my mother, to whom, under God, I owe more than to all the world beside. The Selma Times publishes a telegram dated "Clinton, Ala.," telling of a strike among miners. Jemison and Environs.

Warm weather has at last set in in earnest, and crops are growing fast. A good rain now and then is all that is needed to insure good crops in this section.

Mrs. Nettie Orr, of Danville, Morgan county, Judge J. T. Leeper and wife, of Columbiana, Hon. Henry Wilson and wife, of Montevallo, and Mr. J. A. Bandy, of Jonesboro, Jefferson county, visited relatives in Jemison, last week.

Mr. P A. Noblett, of County Line, Tenn., who has been stopping in Jemison, for several months past, engaged in the lumber business, left us last week for his home in Tennessee. He will be greatly missed.

Our excellent fellow townsman, Mr J. P. Allen, is erecting a neat residence near the one he now occupies.

"Bijou," the VIEW's Maplesville correspondent, boasts of "four organs" in Maplesville. That's nothing. Jemison has one piano, three organs, two accordeons, two Jews' harps, one harmonica, three howling curs and a spaniel. Furthermore, the halcyon evening zephyr is resonant with the musical hum of the little black gnat, and the song of the festive mosquito is nightly heard in the land. "Back and come again," "Bijou."

Whom shall we elect to represent our county in the next Legislature? is a question frequently heard in the last few days. One of Jemison's most substantial and influential citizens suggests that, as Bibb proposes to elect Dr. E. H. Moren, and Shelby, Dr. R. N. Hawkins, that Chilton follow suit and elect Dr. I. D. Lanier. What says the Dr.? "Docco" is sure of one thing: If the Doctor will promise to do all he can, if elected, to have Jemison made a separate school district, every voter in the town and environs will "go in for him solid."

We endorse all your Maplesville correspondent had to say in regard to the gubernatorial, senatorial and congressional representative questions. DOCKO.

From Randolph.

As it has been some time since viewing anything in the VIEW from Randolph, I write you again.

Business is at a standstill. A man wanted to buy some meat and corn from a merchant yesterday, and pay for it next Fall. This looks like business. Can sell all we have, and as a merchant never runs out of money, he is of course always glad to sell goods on this plan. We are not at all anxious to sell to a man who may come along with plenty of money in his pocket. Sich is life.

As to the farming interests of our neighborhood, a conversation with a model farmer was necessary to arrive at facts. Consequently, I ransacked the right genial Col. M. L. Smitherman, who tells me his oats are fine, wheat good, potatoes, &c., looking well, and his cotton looking very well, some of it two feet high, and that the crop prospect generally is very encouraging.

Everybody here is well, and the balance getting well, except matrimonial policy holders. They are afraid they can't marry in six months, I suppose. Yours truly,

GENERAL LEE.

A Healthy Section.

The State health officer was surprised at the report made by our county health officer, a few weeks since, and we publish the following, received after Dr. Robinson had written to him, giving the reason for our very small death rate:

MONTGOMERY, June 17, '82.

DR. J. P. ROBINSON, Clanton:

Dear Sir—I am very glad to learn from your postal of the 15th, which reached me to-day, that it is extreme healthfulness of your county, and not incomplete returns that makes your death rate so small.

JEROME COCHRAN,
State Health Officer.

A correspondent, who ought to know better, if he doesn't, writes very disparagingly of Gen. O'Neal, the Democratic nominee for Governor. He spells the name O'Neill, and wants to know "who in h—l is he, anyhow." In reply we refer him to the last week's issue of this paper, and will add that Gen. O'Neal is the man who proved to be the most popular before the State Democratic Convention, and he is one whose almost universal popularity will enable him to bring out a tremendous Democratic vote in the August election.

Summer has set in with a vengeance.

Save the Straw.

We call the attention of farmers to this suggestion from an exchange:

"The abundant oat crop is a blessing to this county and should be made the most of. The grain will be properly taken care of, but there will be a disposition to waste the abundance of straw. This should not be, as it makes most excellent forage, and if properly taken care of will prove of immense value in carrying stock through the fall and winter. It should be carefully housed or stacked and every particle preserved. When the farmers of this section learn to take care of what they raise they will become wealthy."

THE Farmers' & Mechanics'
MUTUAL Aid Association
OF ST. LOUIS.

This association is first class, and, owing to its adaptability to the laboring population, promises to be the leading one of the country.

Its prominent features are the following:

1st. It is incorporated under the laws of Missouri, and its officers and agents are all bonded.

2nd. Both males and females, between the ages of 18 and 60 years, in good health, may become members by paying an initiation fee of $10.00.

3d. There are THREE GRADES OF BENEFITS, viz: $2,500, $2,000, and $1,500. Applicants between the ages of 18 and 36 years, may obtain the highest in the above order, at death, or at the expiration of 25 years, with a return of 85 per cent of all matured certificates. Those between 36 and 48 years can obtain the $2,000 benefit; and those between 48 and 60 years can obtain the $1,500 benefit, with a proportionate return of all mortuary fees paid in, at the expiration of 20 and 15 years respectively.

4th. The mortuary fee is fixed at $1.00, is unalterable, and is payable, after 30 days' notice, whenever one in 3,500 members die. There is no other expense. Its actual cost will not be more that $20 a year.

5th. Each member is his own banker.

The principles of the association are electic, charitable and benevolent.

Death is certain, let all make timely provision for their loved ones.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Mr. E. H. Lowe has cotton in loom near Clanton.

The Teacher's Institute meets on riday, the 7th of July, and will ontinue two days.

A negro was shot near Jemison, n Tuesday by a Mr. Gibson. We ave not learned the particulars.

The public generally are invited y Prof. Hall to attend his opening ball, on next Friday evening, at Verbena.

Clanton Academy will begin its extra or vacation term on the 10th of July. Quite a good attendance s expected.

Mr. L. B. Cross, of Shelby county, as opened a school at Lomax. uccess to him. He is a worthy oung man.

Miss Dixie Darwin, one of Huntsville's beautiful and attractive young ladies, is visiting Miss Lucla Lanier, in Clanton.

Rev. G. Parker will preach, by request, under the mill shed at Lomax, June 25th. Subject: "Life, Death, Judgment and Eternity."

Crops along the S. & N. Alabama railroad between Montgomery and Birmingham are looking well, and the present warm spell is proving very beneficial to them.

Seab. Jackson, colored, charged with burglary, had a preliminary rial on last Friday. He was bound over to the circuit court, and failing to make bond, was returned to jail.

We return thanks to Miss "L. C.," for an invitation to be present at the 26th Annual Commencement of the Alabama Conference Female College, Tuskegee, which began on Sunday last.

Henry Foshee was arrested last week and bound over in the sum of $250 to appear before the county court, the first Monday in July. It will be remembered that he is the negro who shot Lewis Owen.

A grand picnic and barbecue will come off at Cooper's Station on the glorious fourth. We understand that the candidates for the Legislature will be on hand to tell what they expect to do for the dear people.

There will be a Masonic dinner, at Maplesville, on next Saturday, June 24th. Deatsville Lodge will also have a dinner on that day. The Clanton Lodge has postponed its installation of officers, in order to allow its members to attend.

Base Ball.

The match game of base ball will be played between the Clanton and Columbiana clubs, on to-morrow, Friday, at Calera. Arrangements have been made at Calera, for the comfort of visitors wishing to witness the game, and we hear of quite a number who will attend from Clanton. The following is a list of the members of the two clubs, with their positions:

CHILTON VIEW.

B. H. Chestnut, captain and short stop; Wash Farr, pitcher; John Farr, catcher; S. J. Warner, first base; W. D. Lanier, second base; A. J. Gullahorn, third base; Geo. Powell, centre field; L. H. Stewart, right field; Riley Robinson, left field.

HIRSCHER.

Frank Nelson, captain and pitcher, J. C. Lawrence, catcher; J. P. Spencer, short stop; Joe Hill, first base; J. R. White, second base; J. S. Pitts, third base; T. J. Caldwell, centre field; A. M. Elliott, Jr., right field; Joe Curtis, left field.

Elocutionary.

We had the pleasure, last week, of attending the "Elocutionary Entertainment," given by the pupils of Miss Griffin's school, at McDonald's Opera House, Montgomery. Miss Griffin is a lady who enjoys an enviable reputation as an instructress in elocution, as well as various other branches; and the exercises of her school proved conclusively that her reputation is not undeserved. A number of her pupils, who exhibited considerable elocutionary talent, as well careful training, deserve special mention. Such were Misses Fannie Milam Hattie Child, Lucy Judkins and Mary and Alice Lemon. Of the young gentlemen, Masters Thornton Taliaferro and Parker Buford did themselves and their teacher great credit. As was stated by Master Taliaferro, "elocution is rapidly becoming one of the fine arts," and we shall long revert to their entertainment with thoughts of the pleasure it afforded.

Clanton Academy.

The first session of this school will close with an examination on Thursday and Friday, the last two days of this month.

The exercises will be held in the Academy building, and will begin at 9 o'clock, Thursday morning.

The examination of the classes will take place during the day time of both days, and at night we will have declamation and recitations of poetry, interspersed, perhaps, with music.

On Friday, at 11 a. m., there will be an address by Rev. J. W. Shores.

The public generally are cordially and earnestly invited to attend.

W. A. MONTGOMERY,
Clanton, June, 1882. Principal.

Married.

At the residence of the bride's father, on the afternoon of the 14th inst., by Rev. J. W. Shores, Mr. W. J. Simpson and Miss Mary Callen.

The couple left on the evening train to visit relatives of the bride in Mississippi. We congratulate the handsome groom on his winning such a fair prize in the lottery of life. May their path through life be strewn with the flowers of happiness.

"Be sure, friend,
There's a time for love or life were vile,
A tedious circle of unjoyous days
With senseless hurry filled, distasteful wretched,
Till love comes smiling in."

New Advertisements.

For tobacco and cigars call on or send to I. Forst, First Avenue, Birmingham, Ala. See card.

Elsewhere will be found an advertisement of that thorough going and substantial business man of the Magic City, Mr. F. P. O'Brien. If you need anything in his line order from him.

Read advertisement of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Mutual Aid Association of St. Louis. This is one of the best life insurance companies in the country. A. L. Haralson, at Verbena, is agent for Chilton, Elmore and Autauga.

The Strike.

We learn that about thirty new hands have taken the places of the strikers at the Sloss Mines. The mines are now working about forty-five hands. No change has been made in the hours of work, and they are still required to work eleven hours a day. This is too long for such work, and another strike may shortly be expected. We think the company will find in the end that a lessening of the time will be a saving of expense.

A correspondent mentions the name of Dr. I. D. Lanier, for representative in the Legislature. We have for some time expected a call upon him to become a candidate for the office, as we have heard his name mentioned in connection with the position, in various portions of the county. Chilton county could not send a better man than Dr. Lanier, and we trust that he may be prevailed upon to become a candidate.

Tax Sale.

Under and by virtue of a decree rendered at the regular June term of the Probate Court of Chilton County, by the Hon. H. J. Callen, Judge of Probate of said county, I will proceed to sell in front of the courthouse door in the town of Clanton, on Monday, the 17th day of July, 1882, the following described real estate, for the tax and costs due thereon, for the tax year 1881, viz:

UPPER MICHIGAN.

Mining regions are proverbially barren and rocky, and the Upper Peninsula of Michigan—at least that portion of it which is so productive of iron and copper—forms no exception to this rule. It is old—older than most of our hills, for it was the first land that was attached to the original Laurentian nucleus about which our continent has been formed. It has, in consequence, always been a favorite field for geological study, and its novel industrial features make it no less interesting to the ordinary traveler.

The face of the country is rugged and seamed and worn. Were it not for its mineral wealth it would remain permanently a wilderness. Lumber companies would invade here and there, and retire after having robbed the forest of the pine which is found in a few scattered patches. It would be an eddy where the stream of Western migration had left a few Indians and woodsmen to subsist by the methods of primitive life. The land is generally valueless from the farmer's point of view, for the soil is a light drift—too light for wheat—and the climate a winter modified by a season of summer weather too short for Indian corn to ripen. Hay, oats and potatoes yield the farmer a fair return, but the climate is so rigorous that the securing of shelter and fuel calls for so large an amount of energy that little is left to devote to cultivation. It is a proof of this that a very inconsiderable fraction of the population attempts to subsist by farming, although the freight from Chicago is added to the price of all the staple articles of production—hay, for instance, being from $20 to $25 a ton, and milk 10 cents a quart. Curiously enough strawberries and currants reach a perfection unknown in more hospitable latitudes, a Marquette strawberry resembling in size a Seckel pear; and in flavor a wild strawberry. This is owing, no doubt, to the fact that in northern latitudes—Marquette is about as far north as Quebec—the few summer days have from eighteen to twenty hours of sunlight and after-glow, and vegetable growth is virtually uninterrupted by darkness. Light, the botanists tell us, bears the same relation to aroma that heat does to sweetness. Such strawberries as these must be seen to be appreciated, and must be visited to be seen, for they are too large and too delicate to bear travel themselves.

I have spoken of the climate as a winter modified by a short summer. The July and August weather I can vouch for as delightful. Even when the sun is hottest you feel instinctively that there is no prostrating power in it, and the nights are invariably cool. In July the mean daily range was 19 deg., and the monthly range 50 deg., the lowest recorded temperature being 38 deg. Near the lake the presence of so large a body of water, which at Marquette never falls below 52 deg., and on the extreme northern end of the peninsula never below 48 deg., acts an equalizer, and restricts the range within comparatively narrow limits. This low temperature of the lake water, which is higher than that of any of the streams entering it, precludes the idea of bathing. As a consequence few of the lake sailors can swim, and it would be of little avail to them as a means of saving life if they could, for the most robust man if he falls into Lake Superior chills and dies in a few moments. The numerous trout streams in the woods are of an icy coldness. The snow, which falls to a depth of six or seven feet, melts and sinks into the sandy ground, to reappear from deep-seated springs with a temperature of 39 deg., which is exactly equal to the average annual temperature of the place. The thick forests prevent the sun from warming the ground or the water. And finally the lake is so deep—its bed reaching several hundred feet below the level of the sea—that the summer air has little effect on it before it is again covered with ice. There is no other place on the globe where so large a body of cold fresh water lies at an elevation of six hundred feet above the sea. The air in contact with this deep, chilly water seems to acquire a peculiar vivifying and refreshing quality, quite impossible to describe, but very easy to appreciate. Here must be the great summer sanitarium or cooling-off place for Chicago and Milwaukee.—F. Johnson, Jr., in Harper's Magazine.

THAT IS THE QUESTION.

Many a bustling, successful business man would delight in living simply in some quiet country village on one-tenth the money he now spends, and without a hundredth part of the worry that is now shortening his life and making him the dullest company at home. But what would his wife say? Many a plain, quiet little woman is utterly tired of the ceaseless labor of trying to make as effective an impression as her richer and handsomer acquaintances. But what would her husband say?—New York Herald.

MATTHEW ARNOLD says: "Sanity—that is the great virtue of the ancient literature; the want of that is the great defect of the modern, in spite of all its variety and power. It is impossible to read carefully the great ancients without losing something of our caprice and eccentricity, and to emulate them we must at least read them."

VENTILATING RAILWAY CARS.

Everybody who has traveled by rail in winter has suffered from the horrible ventilation, or rather the want of ventilation of, the ordinary passenger car. It is to all a cause of great annoyance and suffering, and to many of serious illness, if not permanent ill health. A gentleman of this city, who travels a good deal, has hit upon an effectual means of relief from the evil. He states it as follows:

"When I find the air in the car becoming oppressive, I listen for the locomotive to give the signal of our approach to a station. As soon as I hear the whistle, I take my station at the rear end of the car, and watch for the conductor or brakeman to make his appearance, as I know he will presently do, at the other door in the front end. As he opens the front door, I open the back door. The motion of the train instantly causes the car to be flushed and swept by a flood of outer air. In five or ten seconds—just while the doors are casually open—all the foul air is expelled, and the car is filled with pure, cool, fresh air from without. When the conductor shuts his door, I shut mine. If somebody squalls out for the door to be shut, I promptly beg pardon and shut it. Meantime the business has been done, and all are relieved and benefited. I repeat the trick at every station or two, or as often as is necessary, and nobody so far as I know has ever suspected the design." It works like a charm, and I have escaped, in this way, many a cold and sore throat, and many hours of half suffocation and suffering.
—Indianapolis Herald.

THE AGE OF MIRACLES.

"Do you believe in miracles," Alonzo? Well, we should preach. When a man can sit down in a New York restaurant and have brook trout, spring chicken, venison steak and reed bird served off the same old soup bone, we are ready to take in any miracle you ever saw in print. Believe in miracles? When the American farmer can put a quart of strawberries in a box that won't hold a pint of sand; when almost any coal dealer can make 1,700 weigh a ton; when a common-looking clerk can measure a whole yard at one sweep of a thirty-three inch stick; when a ten-pound block of ice looks small alongside a four-ounce hailstone; when any barkeeper turns whisky into water before he opens up in the morning; when you can put out a fire with illuminating oil; when you can find a miraculous draught of fishes in the sky-blue milk; when a committee of women at a church fair can make a barrel of soup with one cove oyster; when—do we believe in miracles, doubting Alonzo? It is an age of miracles. The world is full of miracles, or overrun with rascals. You may accept either interpretation.—Hawkeye.

BROTHERHOOD.

"There, boy, is a big penny for you; now go home and say your prayers like a Christian," said the plethoric to the lean on the avenue.

"And what prayer shall I say?' asked little lean.

"Say 'Our Father which art in heaven,'" replied plethoric.

"And is He our father—yours and mine too?"

"Most assuredly."

"Then are you my big brother?"

"Of course I am."

Then little man looked up and asked the question which even religion can't compel any man to answer: "Aren't you ashamed of yourself to offer your poor little brother a penny when you have plenty, and you know he is 'most starved to death?"

"How ARE you getting along?" asked a widow of her late husband, who appeared to her at midnight as a ghost. Ghost—"Very well, indeed; much better than during my twenty years' married life on earth." Widow (delightedly)—"Then you are in heaven?" Ghost—"Oh! no."

DEVOTE each day to the object when in time, and the evening will find something done.

Its Star Still Ascending.

In a recent call upon Mr. W. H. McAllister, 206 Front street, general agent for the sale of the Star Chewing Tobacco, he thus spoke to one of our reporters: "I was tortured with pain from acute rheumatism, and cared not whether I lived or died. I tried St. Jacobs Oil—just two applications of which entirely cured me."—San Francisco (Cal.) Call.

Could Hardly Stand on Her Feet.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I must tell you what your medicine has done for me. Before taking your "Favorite Prescription" I could hardly stand on my feet, but, by following your advice, I am perfectly cured. The "Favorite Prescription" is a wonderful medicine for debilitated and nervous females. I cannot express how thankful I am to you for your advice. Yours truly,

"Their Occupation Gone."

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: I was attacked with congestion of the lungs, soreness over the liver, severe pain in the joints, a burning fever, and general giving away of the whole system. Failing to find relief in remedies prescribed, I tried your "Golden Medical Discovery." It effected my entire cure. Your medicines have only to be used to be appreciated. If every family would give them a trial, nine-tenths of the doctors would, like Othello, find their occupation gone. Yours truly,

A CRABBED CREATURE.

That nature cares for and entertains her own has become an established fact to all observers. Who does not love the sound of the brightly scintillating waves leaping from the phosphorescent sea, as they break against the rocks in the summer night until Nature herself, weary of the operation, turns the sounding surf towards the oppposite shore, leaving stranded some badly-mutilated snail, which wanders solemnly on, Bohemian fashion—with all its worldly store upon its back. On the same beach may be found our crustacean edible—the crab—whose chief apology for existing at all seems to to be its ability to furnish a delectable meal to fortunate bipeds. The crab being covered with a hard, impenetrable shell, it is not easy to molest or make him afraid; therefore he wages war in his watery world unceasingly when once attacked. Although tiny, he cannot be said to be devoid of understanding, having ten legs to assist his locomotion; this, however, avails him little, for, when conquered, he never turns his back to his enemy, starting into a bold run, but, like many politicians during election time, slips off sideways. There comes a time in the life of this pugnacious fellow when the years bring him more bone and muscle than he can dispose of with comfort, and he finds himself in a very tight place; his shoes pinch him and he begins to realize the practicability of applying to Dame Nature for more room or a house in proportion to his increasing size. Nature slowly responds to the call; but in her own good time provides a new home, so that the enterprising little creature does not wander about homeless, but is provided for suitably, as was the old sailor, who dropped his rheumatism and crabbedness when he applied the Great German Remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL. This last, however, may sound rather fishy to the skeptical reader, and to such we would reply in language too plain to be misunderstood—in words illustrating facts that even the waves of time cannot wash away or scaly epithets affect. ST. JACOBS OIL to-day has rendered the lives and homes of myriads of sufferers brighter than ever the electric light can, which people pause to admire along the way. Still more happily served than the old sailor was an invalid, who wrote thus concerning his case:

"CROOKED HAERTEL."

Accept a thousand thanks for that "golden remedy." I suffered for many years with rheumatic pain in my limbs. My legs were drawn together, and people called me "Crooked Haertel." I used ST. JACOBS OIL and was cured, and now feel so well that I think I could dance, as in my young days. JOHN HAERTEL, Fremont, Ill.

-Anti-Liquor

To come before the public with an absolute cure for drunkenness, or a specific to remove the desire for alcoholic stimulants, seems to many, we have no doubt, an absurdity; such is the case, nevertheless, and before offering our medicine to the public we thoroughly convinced ourselves by actual experiment that it would do all we claim for it.

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS, a complete non-alcoholic tonic, will not only remove all the nervous disorders and weakness remaining after excessive indulgence caused by liquor, but will absolutely kill that desire for artificial stimulants that every intemperate man feels driving him to ruin

BROWN'S IRON BITTERS is also a remarkable and trustworthy remedy (having the confidence of the medical profession) for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, and all disorders of the nerves, muscles, and digestive organs. As a spring tonic for ladies, children, and all that need new life and rich blood, it is without an equal. Price $1.00 a bottle. Get the genuine.

A SEVERE TEST.

Story of the Melbourne Police.

e years ago—a good many more, than I care to recall now—I was ing very disconsolately through the main thoroughfares of Mel- , debating with myself the advisa- f walking down to the quay and my services as steward to the n of the first homeward-bound ves- which I might see the "blue- hoisted. Things had gone very with me; every enterprise to I had turned my attention had fallen through or resulted dis- ly to myself; and, after vainly my luck in the colony for over ears, I came to the conclusion e sooner I reconciled myself to er failure of my attempts the bet- ould be both for my peace of nd my constitution.

his dismal mood I was listlessly g over the shipping announce- posted on an adjacent wall, when I cross a notice from the Police De- nt, intimating, in tersely official ge, that a few new hands were —hands who were strong, vigor- althy, shrewd, good horsemen, joicing in the possession of such natural advantages as would inev- insure their success in any line chose to adopt. I was a good man, healthy, and tolerably ; my shrewdness I had begun to lately; and, as for the rest of the rata—well, I suppose I was as ff as most people.

e, possibly, was a chance for me; rate, it was only a few days' delay hing came of it; I would make my ation and chance it. I returned to ggings, wrote an official applica- per directions, and, to make a tory short, received, two days lat- note desiring my attendance at the on the following day. Here, rather stiff examination, physical ental, and such tests of horseman- s taking a five-barred gate with my folded—which I accomplished suc- lly—I was told that everything lerably satisfactory, and I might t an official notification of appoint- at an early date. Meanwhile, it be desirable, I was informed, that the matter, as far as it had gone, private; a stipulation I had no dif- in conforming to, since I had not le friend in the city.

the evening of the following day I at my quarters a second note from Superintendent [illegible], conspicuously ed "Private," and conveying the agreeable intelligence that I was orarily engaged from that day. The closed with a request that I would t once on the Superintendent.

newhat to my dismay, I found, on nting myself, that my permanent ntment was conditioned upon my ectorily carrying through a special en on hand. It was an affair of nicety; and an old hand, from an- station, would have been given the but for being absent on other ess. The matter would admit of lay; and it was imperatively neces- hat it was undertaken by some one r seemingly not, belonging to the ourne force. In short, I was to do The matter was briefly this: A t of Government papers, of high importance, had been stolen from the messenger to whose care they were intrusted; and, from information received, is seemed pretty certain that their present possessor—a man fast becoming notorious in the colony—would be walking toward the city next afternoon; and to prevent his intimate acquaintance with the town enabling him to escape, or any confederates attempting his release, I was to wait by a bridge on the line of road, about ten miles out of Melbourne, and get the papers from him. The man was by no means to be shot, or if possible even hurt; but the papers must be secured. Minute instructions as to his appearance were followed by a pretty plain implication that my career in the force would very largely depend upon my success.

I felt, as may be easily imagined, in anything but high spirits. The prospect of a single-handed encounter with a man of whose resources I knew nothing, and who might blow my brains out before I had a chance of attack, was not cheering. However, there was nothing for it; it was my last chance, and I must embrace it without shirking.

Next day, which was Sunday, I accordingly procured a horse from the station, and, taking my revolver with me, started out to try my luck as a policeman, and about 2 o'clock in the afternoon came near the place mentioned. I left my horse at the nearest roadside "hotel," sauntered to the bridge, and, leaning over the rail with no very distinct notion of how I was going to act, waited for my man with what coolness I could muster.

Two hours had passed; the sun was beginning to go down; and I was just preparing to console myself with the notion that the man had got wind of our intention, and gone by another route, when I became aware of the approach of a solitary pedestrian. As he came nearer, I ran over the description of the man I wanted—which I had learned by heart—and at once concluded that this was the individual. He was a tall, powerful, uncompromising-looking fellow of about five and forty, muscular enough to have lifted me up and thrown me over the bridge into the shining water beneath. I commenced to walk over the bridge as the man approached it—passed him slowly, and felt sure it was the man.

After going two or three yards, I turned back. Hearing my step, the purloiner of state documents turned round.

"Well, mate, what is it?"

"Can you oblige me with a pipe of 'baccy?" I asked.

"Oh! yes;" handing me his pouch. "What are you doing about here? You don't look over-brisk. Broke?"

"Pretty nearly," I replied.

"New arrival, I suppose?"

"Almost."

"Ah! there are too many carpet-knights flooding Melbourne. Come out expecting to make a pile, got disappointed, and don't like to work for your grub, eh? Put a screw of tobacco in your pocket—you'll find it pleasant company on the road."

I nearly emptied the pouch and handed it back; and, as the owner put out his hand for it, I slipped my foot behind his heel and pushed him. He tripped and fell splendidly. I was pretty quick in wrestling, and I took hold of the man's throat with my left hand, put my knees on his chest and with my right hand felt in the breast-pocket of his coat. He struggled violently, but I thought I should succeed. I got my hand on some papers; but, as I was drawing them from the pocket, the ruffian got hold of my right knee-cap with his left hand, and gave it such a terrible wrench that I believed he had dislocated the joint. Then feeling my hold relax, he suddenly hoisted himself with his right hand, sprang up, caught hold of my wrists, and hurried me to the bridge. Holding me thus in an iron grip, and glaring fiercely at me, he said:

"I see your game; there's only one way of dealing with the police. Dead men tell no tales; so over you're going, youngster."

Suiting his action to the word he released my hands, and in the same instant grasped me firmly and hoisted me.

My last chance seemed to lie in an old twist I had learned at college. As the man raised me, I placed my feet on the brickwork of the bridge, pushed myself back with all my strength, jerked a little forward, lowered my head, and then fairly twisted under my captor's arm from right to left. My school experience had saved my life; for the man let go his hold with a cry of pain, and quick as thought I sprang upon him.

"It's all right, old fellow, take the papers and read them."

But in the mad excitement of the moment, and remembering my mission, I thought this surrender was only a ruse on the part of the ruffian. He sat down on the road in the most undignified fashion and handed me the papers. The first one that met my gaze was a headed piece of police-office paper, on which was written: "This is your test for entering the force;" and was signed by the Superintendent.

"Well, young man," said mine enemy, "you have passed the last exam.—with honors. You have nearly broken my wrist. But my horse is at the first roadside hotel. If you'll come with me I'll have a drink with you, and get some cold lotion for this sprain. I believe it will be a case of splints and sick leave; but you have done your work well. Bother the arm—how it aches!" (So did my knee.)

The report was satisfactory, and I was appointed permanently. Mr. Superintendent's test caused me to be sent on various duties which led me into many rough experiences; but I never believed myself to be so near death as when I was deciding my future with my superior officer.—Chambers' Journal.

CHRIST'S SENTENCE.

The Alleged Copy of the Most Memorable Judicial Sentence Ever Pronounced.

The following is a copy of the most memorable judicial sentence which has ever been pronounced in the annals of the world, namely, that of death against the Savior, with the remarks which the Journal Le Droit has collected and the knowledge of which must be interesting in the highest degree to every Christian. It is word for word as follows:

Sentence pronounced by Pontius Pilate, intendant of the Lower Province of Galilee, that Jesus of Nazareth shall suffer death by the cross.

In the seventh year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius, and on the 24th day of the month of March, in the most holy city of Jerusalem, during the pontificate of Annas and Ciphas.

Pontius Pilate, intendant of the province of Lower Galilee, sitting in judgment of the presidential seat of the Praetors, sentences Jesus of Nazareth to death on a cross between two robbers, as the numerous and notorious testimonials of the people prove:

1. Jesus is a misleader.
2. He has excited the people to sedition.
3. He is an enemy to the law.
4. He called himself the Son of God.
5. He calls himself, falsely, the King of Israel.
6. He went into the temple followed by a multitude carrying palms in their hands.

Orders from the First Centurion Quirillis Cornelius to bring him to the place of execution forbid all persons, rich or poor, to prevent the execution of Jesus.

The witnesses who have signed the execution of Jesus are:

1. Daniel Robani, Pharisee.
2. John Zorababel.
3. Raphael Robani.
4. Capet.

Jesus to be taken out of Jerusalem through the gates of Tournes.

The sentence is engraved on a plate of brass in the Hebrew language, and on its sides are the following words: "A similar plate has been sent to each tribe." It was discovered in the year 1280, in the city of Aquilla, in the Kingdom of Naples, by a search made for Roman antiquities, and it remained there until it was found by the Commission of Arts in the French army in Italy. Up to the time of the campaign in Southern Italy it was preserved in the sacristy of the Carthusians, near Naples, where it was kept in a box of ebony. Since then the relic has been kept in the chapel of Casert. The Carthusians obtained the privilege, by their petitions, that the plate might be kept by them, which was an acknowledgment of the sacrifice which they made for the French army. The French translation was made literally by the members of the Commission on Arts. Denon had a fac simile of the plate engraved, which was bought by Lord Howard on the sale of his cabinet for 2,890 francs. There seems to be no historical doubt as to the authenticity of this plate. The reasons of the sentence correspond exactly with those of the gospel.

ORIGIN OF THE CAMP-MEETING.

There are those who trace the origin of the camp-meeting to Old Testament times, and refer to many passages from Genesis to the days of John the Baptist for proofs. We will, however, consider its rise as strictly American, and make no other mention of the Bible references than are suggested in the opening paragraph.

The first camp-meeting in the United States was held in the year 1799, on the banks of the Red river in Kentucky. The way it came about was somewhat peculiar. Two brothers named McGee, one a Methodist and the other a Presbyterian, were on a religious tour from Tennessee to a place called in those days the "Barrens." They stopped at a settlement to attend a sacramental occasion with a Presbyterian minister, the Rev. Mr. McGreely by name. John McGee, the Methodist, preached on invitation, and his services are described as having been marked "with great liberty and power." McGee's brother and the Rev. Mr. Hoge followed with sermons, and their effects were remarkable, as they produced "tears of contrition and shouts of joy."

The several Presbyterian ministers, the Rev. Messrs. McGreely, Hoge and Rankins, left the house, but the McGees were too powerfully affected to depart. John was expected to preach again, but when the time came he arose and informed the people that the overpowering nature of his feelings would not allow of his preaching, and he exhorted them to surrender their hearts to God. The excitement is said to have been indescribable. The reports of these wonderful services were heard by the people in the country round, and many rushed to the place to see the preachers and witness the unusual religious exercises. the meeting house was overflowed, and an altar was erected to the Lord in the forest.

This added new interest to the movement, and people assembled from far and near, with provisions and other necessaries for camping out, and remained several days, living in tents. For the time denominational divisions seemed to be forgotten, and the services were conducted by Presbyterians, Methodists and Baptists.

The results were so wonderful that another meeting of the same sort was suggested, and was held on the Muddy river, and still another was held on what was called the Ridge, both having been attended by great crowds who came for many miles around. These services were continued and extended with similar results, the Presbyterians and Methodists directing and conducting them. It is stated that at one of these meetings in Kentucky there were present at least 20,000 persons.

The Presbyterians gradually retired from the field, while the Methodists carried the meetings to all parts of the country. Since then other denominations have adopted them, and they have continued with more or less efficacy up to the present time.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

PROFITABLE LITIGATION.

Lawyer—"Hurrah, let me congratulate you. You are the luckiest of mortals. Embrace me."

They embrace, and the client ventures to ask the cause of so much emotion.

"Thanks to my skill," replied the lawyer, "I have obtained a judgment in your favor in the Supreme Court."

"After nine long years."

"But, my dear fellow, better late than never."

"How much do I get?" asks the client, anxiously.

"The court decrees that you shall receive $2,000. The costs and my fee will only amount to $3,500, so all you will have to pay me is $1,500."

"Merciful heaven, and I must lose my money beside?"

"Of course you lose your money, but console yourself; you have gained your case. You can't expect to gain everything."

"Then I will go back to the plowing. The work is not near so hard, and pays better," said the boy.

Finally, the bee stopped for a moment, and after remaining stationary for an instant stung the little fellow. When the cry of pain was over the little child said to his mamma that he didn't care about the bee's walking about on him, but he didn't like his sitting down on him.—Dayton Journal.

THE UNITED STATES CAPITOL.

The dome is the most impressive feature of the new Capitol at Washington. It was designed by Walters, to replace the smaller one removed in 1856, and ranks fifth in height and size among the notable domes of the world. It is, in fact, 360 feet high above the west gate of the park at the foot of the hill on which it stands. Its diameter is 138½ feet, and it is praised as one of the most symmetrical, graceful structures in the whole world.

Its octagonal or stylobate base rises 93 feet above the basement floor of the Capitol. As it leaves the top line of the building it consists of a peristyle 124 feet in diameter, of 36 iron-fluted columns, 27 feet high. Each of these columns weighs six tons. Above them is a balustrade. Above the balustrade begins the dome, which converges upward to an apex, surmounted by a lantern 15 feet in diameter and 50 feet high, which is surrounded by a peristyle and crowned by the bronze statue of Freedom, designed by Crawford.

On Dec. 12, 1863, the statue was raised and placed in its present position at the apex of the dome. Thousands of citizens and soldiers were assembled. A national salute of thirty-five guns was fired from a field-battery in the East Park, and this was followed by a reverberating salute by the shotted, heavy guns of the whole chain of forts surrounding the Capitol. Few who were present on that day will forget the mighty acclaim from the people which almost obliterated for a moment the noise of artillery.

The lantern on the dome of the Capitol contains three rows of powerful gas jets, and is very much frequented by strangers, particularly young married couples. The view therefrom in the daytime is magnificent, and even at night, notwithstanding the glare of the gas jets, one may obtain weird views by shading the eyes with the hands and pressing the face close to the glass.

The eastward view looks out on the plain of Capitol Hill toward a background of hills beyond the Anacostia. To the north there is a view, beyond a broad intervening valley, of encircling hills; to the south lie the low ground and sparsely settled parts of Washington; and to the west lies the city with its Botanical Garden, the Mall, the wooded summits of University Square, the unfinished Washington monument, the dome of the Observatory, the glittering stream of the Potomac, and Arlington Heights beyond. No finer view can be had from any capitol. Yet the picture thus viewed is scarcely more enchanting than that of the Capitol itself seen from any point of vantage.—Sunday Magazine.

THE ELDER BOOTH.

Upon the elder Booth's acting Mrs. Clarke's most significant remark is that he was always in the soul of the character and never resembled Boileau's writer, who, "inspired by self-love, forms all his heroes like himself." We shall not here attempt a summary of this extraordinary being in his transfiguration as an actor. The fact which seems to suggest, if not to define, him is that he is heedless and imperfect as an artist, but electrical and fascinating as a human being. He would, for example when acting Macbeth deliberately go to the wing and get a broadsword with which to fight the final battle, and would do this in full view of the audience—just as Ristori, when acting Lady Macbeth, would carry her husband's letter to the side and throw it away. He was not particular, when acting Richard, whether he wore an old dressing gown or a royal robe, and he cared very little where other persons entered or stood, so that they got on and were somewhere. His acting had no touch of the finish of Macready. But the soul that he poured into it was awful and terrible; the face, the hands, the pose, the movement, all was incarnate eloquence; and when the lightning of the blue-gray eyes flashed and the magnificent voice gave out its deep thunder-roll or pealed forth its sonorous trumpet-notes, the hearts of his hearers were swept away on the wings of a tempest. Each tone and each action was then absolutely right. Even his marvelous elocution, which brought out the subtle meaning of every sound in every syllable, seemed inspired, such and so great was the vitality which a glorious imagination thoroughly aroused would strike out of a deep and passionate heart.—New York Tribune.

DILATORY LOVERS.

The impatience of the parents of the young lady over the long and fruitless visits of the chronic caller was pictured in comic colors some years ago by a funny writer. It seems that it was midnight. The young man had farewelled himself out, and Emeline had locked the door and was untying her shoe when her mother came down-stairs with a bed-quilt around her, and said:

"Wanted to creep up stairs without my hearing you, eh? Didn't think I knew it was an hour after midnight, did you?"

The girl made no reply, and the mother continued:

"Did he propose this time?"

"Why, mother!" exclaimed the daughter.

"You can 'why, mother,' all you want to, but don't I know that you've burned up at least four tons of coal courting around here?"

The girl got her shoes off, and the mother stood in the stair door and asked:

"Emeline, have you got any grit?"

"I guess so."

"I guess you haven't. I just wish that fellow with false teeth and a mole on his chin would come sparking me. Do you know what would happen, Emeline?"

"No."

"Well, I'll tell you. He'd come to time in sixty days or he'd get out of this mansion like a goat jumping for sunflower seeds."

And Emeline went to bed hugging this thought to her bosom.

Occasionally such visits become so burdensome that the young lady talks to the young man herself. At least they had such a girl out in Colorado. She had been receiving the attentions of a young man for about a year, but, becoming impatient at his failure to bring matters to a crisis, she resolved to ascertain his intentions. When he next called she took him gently by the ear, led him to a seat and said:

"Nobby, you've been foolin' 'round this claim fur mighty near a year, an' hev never yit shot off your mouth on the marryin' biz. I've cottoned to yer on the square clear through, an' hev stood off every other galoot that has tried to chip in; an' now I want yer to come down to business or leave the ranch. Ef you're on the marry and want a pard that'll stick right to ye till ye pass in your checks an' the good Lord calls ye over the range, just squeal, an' we'll hitch; but ef that ain't yer game, draw out an' give some other feller a show fur his pile. Now, sing yer song or skip out."

He sang.

MEXICAN JAILS.

In the department of jails there is a deficiency. As at present arranged they can present but moderate terrors to evil-doers. The really-fine penitentiary at Guadalajara is the only one in which modern ideas of penal discipline are followed. There is by law no death penalty. The number of the most-nefarious criminals is kept down by semi-official lynchings—as the shooting of certain kinds of offenders on capture—into which nobody ever inquires, and by transportation to Yucatan; but there still remain sufficient to make one look with uneasiness on the slightness of the means of restraint employed. The bolts and bars are only lattices of wood much more often than iron. At the great central prison of Belen, where some 2,000 persons are confined, it seemed to me that a very large portion of them were more comfortable than they could have been in their own squalid homes. They make a strange spectacle indeed as one looks down upon them in large courts, of what again has once been an old convent, where, of all ages, and for sentences of all durations, they eat, sleep and work at various light occupations together. No attempt is made to prevent their communicating with one another, or staring about. They have good air, light and food, and are paid a part of their earnings. They take their siestas at noon, play at checkers, gossip and even bathe luxuriously in a central tank.—W. H. Bishop, in Harper's Magazine.

The Democratic State Executive Committee have issued a patriotic address to the people of the State. In regard to Democratic rule in the State they say: "By our fruits let us be judged."

The Lafayette Sun, published in Chambers county, learns that there will be an Independent candidate for Congress in this, the fifth district. Whoever such a candidate may be, he has our sympathy.

The great æsthete, Oscar Wilde, is now way down in Alabama, and proposes to deliver a lecture on "Decorative Art," in Montgomery, next Thursday night. We venture to say that he can tell the ladies very little they don't already know about the art decorative.

A prominent lawyer of Barbour county, a warm personal friend of Capt. J. M. McKleroy, and one who did every thing he conscientiously could to secure his nomination, for the Governorship before the State Convention, writes us in these words: "The convention has done its work, and although greatly prefering Capt. McKleroy, we accept the situation, and will do our best for the ticket."

The Representative Question.

Several candidates for representative in the Legislature, are already in the field, and it is not improbable that a straightout Republican will be placed in the field by a "conference" which is to be held in Clanton, on next Monday, July 3d. It will do no good for this county to send other than a good Democrat to the Legislature. A member of any other party would be almost if not entirely "alone in his glory," and would have neither weight, influence nor power, had he the will, to do anything in a Legislature where nineteen-twentieths of the members will be Democrats, and consequently opposed to him politically.

We need a man of solid integrity, private and political, to represent us at the State capital, and one whom every good citizen can refer to with pride. A county is judged of by the representative she sends out, and the county that sends a bad one can certainly gain nothing by so doing.

There seems to be some prejudice against conventions in this county, and owing to this fact, one is rarely held. And a good man is not often induced to trust himself in a race with several other candidates of various political proclivities. How long things will continue thus, it is difficult to say. We earnestly trust that the people may wake up to the fact that they should send a man to the Legislature, who can be of some service to them and to the county; a man above reproach, and one capable of thinking for himself and of acting for the benefit of his constituents.

Edward Asbury O'Neal.

Gen. E. A. O'Neal was yesterday nominated by acclamation, upon the 24th ballot, by the Democratic State Convention as their candidate for Governor of Alabama. This result, in the face of the very handsome vote polled by each of his competitors on the previous evening, is a graceful tribute to the worth of a distinguished citizen who has done most gallant service for his State both in peace and war. General O'Neal is a true man in every sense of the world. He was a stubborn, intelligent and dashing officer. He has been long conspicuous as an eloquent advocate and politician. He has been pre-eminent in his devotion and labors for the Democratic party. Better than all, he is a gentleman of unblemished private life, and possesses the confidence and affection of all who know him. In the convention which nominated him there were delegates attached to other candidates by ties to locality, personal friendship or personal obligations, but there were none who were hostile to General O'Neal and none who do not cordially endorse his nomination.

General O'Neal is descended from a South Carolina family of Irish extraction. He was born in Madison county, and has resided at Florence since 1840. In 1841 he was elected State Solicitor. In 1849 he was an unsuccessful candidate for Congress. In 1861 he was elected captain of one of the companies which composed the 9th Alabama, at the organization of which regiment he was elected major, and was promoted lieutenant colonel a little later. In March, 1862, he was appointed colonel of the 26th, and led the gallant regiment in the battles of the Peninsula and in front of Richmond. Upon the first march into Maryland he commanded Rhode's brigade. He was wounded at Seven Pines and at Boonesboro. He distinguished himself at Chancellorsville, Gettysburg and Mine Run.

In 1864 his regiment became a part of Cantey's brigade, and O'Neal took command of that brigade, in front of Dalton. He led this brigade in all the battles upon the retreat of General Johnston to Atlanta. After General Hood took command of the army, Gen. O'Neal was upon detached service until the close of the war. Gen. O'Neal married a sister of the lamented Hon. Sydneham Moore, of Greene, formerly member of Congress from Alabama, who fell mortally wounded at Seven Pines, while leading his brave Eleventh Regiment.

The Walker Murder.

From a recent telegram we learn that Judge J. P. Walker, the father of the murdered Walker boys, was shot and killed at Goodwin, Arkansas. Judge Walker had been furnishing a saw mill (owned by a Mr. Snoddy,) with both money and goods, with the distinct understanding that he was to control the lumber, etc. It seems that Mr. Snoddy owed Judge Walker a good amount, and was not disposed to let Judge Walker get his money. One word brought on another, and Snoddy shot Walker with a large pistol, through the bowels. After being shot Judge Walker got his gun and killed Snoddy on the spot. Judge Walker lingered until Sunday, at 4 P. M. Judge Walker was a native of this State, and raised a large family. No one ever spoke of him but to praise him, and no one knew him but to love him.

The Alabama Boss.

It is stated upon about as good authority as can be had from Republicans, Independents and Piebalds, that Col. Lowe is to have the dispensation of all the Federal patronage in Alabama. This may not be true: but we incline to the opinion that they at least believe it, judging from the obsequious bowing and scraping they have, both great and small, been bestowing on their "Billy," since he came back to North Alabama. Indeed, the Mahone of Alabama (he is thrice welcome to such a title) is just now greatly admired by all of his friends, as well as by himself. We have not yet heard what orders have been issued from the boss since his return to Alabama, but rumor has it that all applicants for U. S. Marshal are required to swear that they will know no other political god but him. And they all swear!

It is said that the boss contemplates several changes in his political household, the exact facts as to which are not known as yet beyond the "inner brotherhood." The information has been conveyed by the boss "kindly but firmly," that only those can expect office who can do the cause of Lowe the greatest good, of which he will himself condescend to become the judge, at stated intervals.

Calera News.

Try Columbiana again, Capt. Chestnutt, and when you give the Hirschers what they need come by Calera and our boys will convince you that your club is not invincible. The Clanton boys did well to come out even when the disadvantages they were laboring under are considered.

You are a man after my own heart "Docco." Send Dr. Lanier to the legislature and have Jemison made a separate school district, and give every child a chance for an education. Money invested in knowledge is the best investment that can be made. "Rufus" has never known "the separate school district" abandoned after a trial.

A few years ago if any one had spoken of opening a milinery store in Calera they would have been considered insane. Now there are two here and both doing well.

The score in the match game of ball was even, but the Clanton boys carried off the flowers with the best wishes of the ladies.

"Bijou" and "Docco" please inform the readers of the View if you have any of those automatic family organs, that give vocal solos (preferably at twelve o'clock at night) in your towns.

Weather hot. Three very slight showers during the week. A good rain would be beneficial. Two weeks have elapsed since the last one.

The Masonic picnic last Saturday was a success, so far as we could judge. A large crowd was present and lemonade flowed like water Rev. Mr. Miars delived the Masonic address. Our presence elsewhere prevented us from hearing it. No political speakers were present.

We would say to your Jemison correspondent that we did not have to rumage the whole neighborhood for musical statistics, as he evidently did. Had we done so, we could have presented enough musical talent to sicken even such a connoisseur as he appears to be.

Clear Creek Chat.

We hope that Dr. Lanier will allow his name to be used by his friends, as a candidate for the Legislature. Though it may be truly said of the Dr. that he is always suariter in modo fortimer in re, yet he will certainly not consent to give Jemison a separate school district.

The negro who was shot by C. C. Gibson, is not dead. The negro had given Mrs. Gibson a good deal of impudence, and Mr. Gibson hid himself in a path, and shot the negro as he was returning from work.

A negro on the farm of Mr. S. A. Curry—the prince of farmers—was snake bitten on Sunday last.

We have just seen a head of oats 29 inches long.

Clear Creek is organizing a base ball club called the "Pine Knots" to play the Clanton club.

CALLIERVILLE, June 26, '82.

DEAR SIR—Your Jemison corres- ondent struck the right key in mentioning Dr. Lanier as our next epresentative in the Legislature. Had our county looked to its true nterests, he would have been sent here ere this. Yours, DIXIE.

To the Democratic and Conservative Voters of Chilton County:

A call is hereby made for a convention of the Democratic and Conservative voters of Chilton county to meet at the courthouse in Clanton, at 12 o'clock m., on Wednesday, the 12th day of July, for the purpose of selecting delegates to the congressional convention for this district, which meets in Dadeville, Tallapoosa county, on the 30th day of August, and to transact such other business as shall come before it.

The different beats in the county will hold primary elections, on Saturday, July 8th, for the selection of delegates to the county convention. The different beats will be allowed delegates as follows, subject to the ratification of the convention, viz: One delegate for every twenty-five votes cast for Gov. Cobb, in 1880, and an additional one for a fraction exceeding twelve.

We do earnestly urge all the good people of the county, to meet at their respective places of voting, on the 8th day of July, and by their votes send such men as they wish to represent them in the convention. If the people thus do their duty, it can never be said a convention was stocked, or the business transacted by foul means.

W. E. STEWART,
A. J. BROOKS,
J. P. VANDERVEER,
Central Committee.

Base Ball.

The match game of base ball between the Chilton View club, of Clanton and the Hirscher club, of Columbiana, was played at Calera, on last Friday. The game was a very interesting one, and a large crowd of spectators witnessed it. The score showed a tie game —26 to 26. The following is the score:

Hirscher	5	1	0	11	2	1	0	4	2—26
Chilton View	2	2	0	1	2	5	5	3	6—26

In the first inning the Views made two runs, and the Hirschers made five. In the third inning each nine was whitewashed. In the fourth, a rain came up, while the Hirschers were at the bat. This placed the men in the field at a great disadvantage, owing to the slipperiness of the ball, and the Hirschers succeeded in making eleven runs.

After the rain the Views "picked up" considerably, whitewashing the Hirschers again in the seventh inning.

The Hirschers were whitewashed twice, and the Views once. The score stood even at the end of the ninth inning.

Mr. W. H. Lee, of Calera, deserves the thanks of both clubs for the impartial and satisfactory manner in which he umpired the game.

Mr. A. S. Hirscher, a leading merchant of Columbiana, and for whom the club is named, was along as scorer. He is a gentleman in the true sense, and his club is composed of a splendid set of young men. Mr. W. H. Foshee was the scorer for the Chilton View club.

The Captain of the Views was placed under obligations to a bevy of Calera's fair ones, who presented him with a beautiful boquet, complimentary to his club; as a consequence, the Views returned considerably elated.

Radical Meeting.

At a "conference" of Republicans, held at Clanton, on Tuesday last, a meeting of leading members of the party was agreed upon for Monday next, July 3, at Clanton. We understand that the meeting was for the purpose of determining upon a course of action in the pending August election. The following circular was issued:

CLANTON, July 27, 1882.

MR. ———

SIR: At an informal meeting of Republicans in Clanton to-day, it was deemed advisable to hold a conference in this place, on Monday next, July 3, at 11 a. m.

The leading members of the party, and those who hold that the maintenance of good government depends upon an honest administration of public affairs, a free and fair ballot, and an honest count of the votes cast, are invited to be present and participate in the conference.

By direction of the committee.
ROBT. H. KNOX, Chairman.

Base Ball Prizes.

Mr. R. Ehrman offers the following prizes to the three best players of the Chilton View base ball club. The first prize, which will be awarded to the best player, will be a good silver watch; the second prize, to the next best player, will be a fine pair of boots; and the third prize, to the next best player, will be a fine hat.

The prizes will be competed for at the next match game that may be played. A competent committee will be selected to watch the game, and decide upon the merits of the contestants.

VERBENA, ALA., June 24.

EDITOR VIEW:—I was pleased to see, in the last issue of the View, that Dr. Lanier had been called upon to become a candidate for Representative. He is the man for the place, and would receive the endorsement of the majority of the voters in this beat.

The Magic of Music Illustrated by a Reminiscence of John Howard Payne.

John Howard Payne was a warm personal friend of John Ross, who will be remembered as a celebrated chief of the Cherokees. At the time the Cherokees were removed from their homes in Georgia to their present possessions, west of the Mississippi river, Payne was spending a few weeks in Georgia with Ross, who was occupying a miserable cabin, having been forcibly ejected from his former home. A number of prominent Cherokees were in prison, and that portion of Georgia in which the tribe was located was scoured by armed squads of the Georgia militia, who had orders to arrest all who refused to leave the country.

While Ross and Payne were seated before the fire in the hut, the door was suddenly burst open and six or eight militia men sprang into the room. Ross' wife was seated on a trunk containing many valuable papers and a small amount of money, and at the unexpected intrusion she sprang up and screamed wildly. Ross spoke to her in the Cherokee language telling her to be seated, as she would thus save the contents of the trunk, and, as she sat down again, the intruders told Ross that both he and Payne were under arrest, and must prepare to accompany the squad to Milledgeville, where they would be imprisoned. The soldiers lost no time in taking their prisoners away. Ross was permitted to ride on his own horse, while Payne was mounted on one led by a soldier. As the little party left the hovel rain began falling and continued until every man was drenched thoroughly. The journey lasted all night. Toward midnight Payne's escort, in order to keep himself awake, began humming: "Home—home—sweet—sweet—home," when Payne remarked: "Little did I expect to hear that song under such circumstances and at such a time. Do you know the author?"

"No," said the soldier, "do you?"

"Yes," Payne answered; "I composed it."

"The devil you did! You can tell that to some fellows, but not to me. Look here, you made that song, you say; if you did—and I know you didn't—you can say it all without stopping. It has something in it about pleasure and palaces. Now pitch in and reel it off; and, if you can't, I'll bounce you from your horse and lead you instead of it."

This threat was answered by Payne, who repeated the song, in a slow, subdued tone, and then sang it, making the old woods ring with the tender melody and pathos of the words. It touched the heart of the rough soldier, who was not only captivated but convinced, and who said that the composer of such a song should never go to prison if he could help it. And when the party reached Milledgeville they were, after a preliminary examination, discharged, much to their surprise. Payne insisted it was because the leader of the squad had been under the magnetic influence of Ross' conversation, and Ross insisted that they had been saved from insult and imprisonment by the power of "Home Sweet, Home," sung as only those who feel can sing it. The friendship existing between Ross and Payne endured until the grave closed over the mortal remains of the latter.

A RASH PROMISE.

A local editor had printed an article severely reflecting upon a prominent citizen of the place, who vowed that he would take summary vengeance upon the man of types, bought a horse-whip and proceeded to the hotel, where the editor was boarding out a big advertisement. Here he inquired for the object of his fury, and was shown to his room, where he found the editor in bed.

"Are you the author of this paragraph?" said the avenger, drawing the paper from his pocket and the horsewhip from under his overcoat.

"I am," replied the editor, turning over, so as to get a better grasp of the situation.

"Well, sir, I have come to settle this matter with you, sir," shouted the avenger.

"Office hours from 6 a. m. to 12 p. m.," replied the editor, yawning; "but, if you prefer to do business here, how do you propose to settle it?"

"By giving you a horse-whipping," cried the avenger.

"What!" exclaimed the editor; "surely, you will not commit a ruffianly attack upon a man in my situation—in bed, undressed, half asleep! You must be a coward to take such an advantage."

"No, sir," retorted the avenger; "I am no coward, sir. I ask no advantage, and will take none. I shall not strike you, sir, until you get out of bed, and dress and defend yourself."

"Then," said the editor, wrapping the blankets around him, "I guess you'll have to wait a spell. I'm game to stay here till next week, anyhow—and longer, if I can get a supply of writing materials. Sit right down, and tell us the news."

There was an appeal to the Revised Version, and the avenger stalked off unavenged.

THE SORROWS OF SINGERS.

The lot of the famous singer is not always a happy one. From the days of Malibran, who was in America over a half a century ago, to those of poor Christine Nilsson, trouble and sorrow have spared none of the great singers who have been popular idols. The most lucky of these is Jenny Lind, who retired on a fortune before her voice failed, and who leads a happy domestic life in London. But Malibran when young married a rascal, and, although her second marriage was not unfortunate, she lived but a very short time after it. Her contemporary and rival, Mlle. Sontag, married an Italian Count and entered fashionable life, retiring from the stage when quite young. But her Count was also a rascal, who squandered all her money in gambling, and she had, when nearly 50 years old, to resume her artistic career, which was brilliant to the last. But her husband was jealous as well as a spendthrift, and when she died in Mexico there were suspicions that she and the handsome tenor Pozzolini were both poisoned. Mlle. Grisi, who was the acknowledged grandest dramatic singer of her time, wedded a man whom she did not love and who was not worthy of her, and she made a scandal by leaving him for the arms of the equally famous tenor, Mario. Mlle. Alboni, probably the grandest contralto singer that ever appeared in public, was married for the fortune in her voice by an Italian Count, but the marriage was not a happy one, and they lived apart for some years. He did not, however, squander her money, and when he died she lost no time in becoming the wife of a French subaltern officer, much younger than herself, who loves her fortune devotedly, and makes himself generally disagreeable to those that rent houses or apartments of hers in Paris.

Nilsson's husband, M. Rouzaud, is said to have inherited insanity from his family, and he was literally madly in love with her when he persuaded her to become his wife. He was crazy, too, about stock speculations, and, after gambling all his own and his wife's fortune away on the Bourse, he died in a mad-house. Another great singer, Mlle. Heilbronn, who was a pet of Paris some years ago, married a French Count, and lost through him all that she had in the crash of the Union Generale. She is now compelled, after having lost the freshness of her voice, to return to the stage. Everybody knows how Adelina Patti threw herself away on a poor old French Marquis, from whom she fled after he had enriched himself out of her earnings, and how she has thrown herself away in another manner with Signor Nicolini. Adelina is reported, by a Western interviewer, to have said, also, that her sister Carlotta's husband is a bad fellow, who spends all his wife makes in gambling.

These are only a few examples; more might be given to illustrate the facility with which popular singers, who can earn from $500 to $5,000 a night, sacrifice themselves on the altar of Hymen, who must be a very mercenary kind of divinity.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

MEASURE OF THINGS.

We measure from ourselves, and as things are for our use and purpose so we approve them. Bring a pear to the table that is rotten, we cry it down; it is naught. But bring a medlar that is rotten and 'tis a fine thing; and yet, I'll warrant you, the pear thinks as well of itself as the medlar does. We measure the excellency of other men by some excellency we conceive to be in ourselves. Nash, a poet, poor enough as poets used to be, seeing an Alderman with his gold chain upon his great horse, by way of scorn said to one of his companions: "Do you see yon fellow? How goodly, how big he looks! Why, that fellow cannot make a blank verse." Nay, we measure the goodness of God from ourselves; we measure His goodness, His justice, His wisdom, by something we call just, good or wise in ourself. And in so doing we judge proportionably to the country fellow in the play, who said if he were a King he would live like a lord, and have pease and bacon every day, and a whip that cried "slash!"—John Selden.

THE NATIONAL FLOWER OF THE CHINESE.

With the Chinese the lily is the national flower, and many superstitions attach to it. Should it blossom upon New Year's day, it is regarded as a most happy omen, presaging the best luck to the fortunate owner of the plant. For this reason a good deal of care is bestowed upon the lily by the Chinaman, in the hope that it may put forth its flower upon the morning of the anniversary. The Chinese lily is different from any other variety. It is grown by placing the bulb on pieces of window glass, stone and china, and giving it a liberal supply of water. The flower is white, with a gold-colored center, something between a daisy and a narcissus. Its fragrance is delightful.

PROFESSIONAL: Two housemaids strolling past a bric-a-brac shop paused to look at two chandeliers in the window—a fine eighteen-branched one and one of three branches. "Which do you like better?" said the younger maid. "The three-brancher," said the veteran, "it is easier cleaned."

THE HUMAN FACE IN MIDDLE AGE.

A curious trait in middle age is that as life goes on some likeness to an animal is often apparent, even to an extent that it might seem to countenance the Pythagorian idea of the transmigration of souls. Every one must know a certain number of people who bear a striking likeness to horses and dogs. These, however, are the nobler animals, so that, in the case of such a comparison, the likeness is perhaps more flattering to the human being than to the dumb animal. It is not often given, even to the soft, melting eye of womanhood, to have that look of courage, endurance and devotion which we sometimes meet in the eye of a hound. Dickens was true to nature when he described the dignified little hops of Dora's bird-like aunts. Now and then the middle-aged lady is of the parrot description of bird, and possibly the human subject may be like a cat, or even like a monkey. A great many are like snakes; indeed, sneak and snake are different forms of the same word, and the moral fact is true as the etymological. When Cicero, in his oration against Piso, attacks that Roman in an extremely personal manner, he is apparently likening him, by a very common figure of speech, to a viper. "Beast," says Cicero, "there is no mistaking the evidence of that slave-like hue, those bristly cheeks, those discolored fangs. Your eyes, your brows, your face, your whole aspect, are the tacit index of your soul." There was a certain German missionary at Tennevelly who made himself extremely disagreeable to the European members of that community. As he observed different animals in the street, he used to point out to his friends the likeness which existed between themselves and these creatures. "There's your picture," he would say to one, pointing to a pig. "There is the likeness of your beastly soul," he would say to another, pointing to a goat. One day he made the usual inquiry about a friend's health, who answered by mentioning some bodily ailment. "I don't ask after your stinking body," was the rejoinder; "but I want to know of your soul." A very painful man! In the room which Voltaire had at Sans Souci there are certain delicate bits of satire upon him carved in wood. For instance, there is a monkey; a parrot, which conveys an idea of his volubility of speech; and a stork, to signify his migrations to and from Prussia, coming in summer and going away in the winter. Wilson, the ornithologist, presumably by brooding so much over birds, became very much like a bird himself. He got the dark, luminous eyes, and his nose was shaped like the very beak of a bird. Yes, this is a curious fancy, and in middle age the likeness to some animal may come on. It will be within the recollection of many Oxford men that a quarter of a century ago there were two great scholars at Oxford, both of them middle-aged men, one of whom was known by the name of the Sickly Vulture, while the other was the Debauched Crow.—London Society.

Language Cannot Describe It.

Mr. Robert Gould, book-keeper for Walker & Maxcy, who are lumber dealers, recently said to our representative: "About one year ago I was taken with the genuine sciatica. I employed the best physicians, but they could only relieve me for the moment. Finally I used St. Jacobs Oil and it effected a complete cure."—Kennebec Reporter, Gardiner, Me.

THE New Albany Press says: "The weekly paper culls the jewels of thought and news from the mass and presents the same to its readers in a condensed, tasteful and palatable shape. The whole paper is read from beginning to end. It is a paper which is taken to be read and enjoyed, and occupies a field peculiarly its own, which can not be invaded nor superseded by any daily."

MR. GAIL B. JOHNSON, business manager of the Houston (Texas) Post, has used St. Jacobs Oil with the greatest benefit for rheumatism, says the Galveston (Texas) News.

A ROCHESTER street-car horse shot out with his heels the other day, and hit the driver with one and the cash-box with the other, and an investigation showed that he had kicked $6 into the driver's overcoat pocket. Such wonderful sagacity on the part of the horse caused the discharge of the driver.

A NEW COMPANY.

Several Atlanta Gentlemen Form a New Watch Manufacturing Company.

Yesterday an application for a charter was filed in the office of the clerk of the superior court of Fulton county by several leading Atlanta business men, asking to be incorporated as the J. P. Stevens watch company. Of course Mr. J. P. Stevens is a leading spirit. The other members are Messrs J. H. Porter, Julius L. Brown, James C. Freeman, Sr., Robert Lowry, W. D. Williams, and L. O Stevens. The company asks for the right to stock at $100,000, $20,000 of which has already been paid in, and the amount will be increased as rapidly as is necessary. It has been fully demonstrated that there is room for such an enterprise, and the fact that the gentlemen comprising the company are shrewd business men, is an evidence that the factory will not be a failure. It will probably end in giving Atlanta an enterprise that will add much to her name and reputation, as the Stevens factory has already done. Mr. Stevens will leave for the north Saturday to have machinery made and to employ workmen. It is proposed to use for the present the building now occupied by J. P. Stevens & Co., simply making some additions and changes. Mr. Stevens' idea is to employ girls very largely to run the light machinery in the factory, and thus another avenue is opened for Atlanta women and girls to earn their livings. As soon as the new company is organized it will start up with about thirty workmen. The company has bright prospects. It has already been demonstrated that there is a large demand for the watches, and a most successful career is predicted for the new enterprise.—Atlanta Constitution.

"Dragging Pains."

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—My wife had suffered with "female weaknesses" for nearly three years. At times she could hardly move, she had such dragging pains. We often saw your "Favorite Prescription" advertised, but supposed like most patent medicines it did not amount to anything, but at last concluded to try a bottle, which she did. It made her sick at first, but it began to show its effect in a marked improvement, and two bottles cured her. Yours, etc., A. J. HUYCK, Deposit, N. Y.

A Friend in Need is a Friend Indeed,

And by such a one's sympathizing advice and aid many a trouble has been lifted and burden lightened. Such a friendship is worth keeping, and when, from his experience, he advises and instructs, his opinions should be heeded. If kind words can never die, and good deeds are never lost, the inducement for always doing the good one can is still a great one. Many people imagine that they had better do nothing than do a little, forgetting that it is the detail that makes the aggregate—the drops that form the showers—the little kindnesses of life that make existence endurable. As, in the picture, the good old ST. JACOB is extending relief to the suffering suppliant by offering a bottle of that wonderful remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL, so all can do something of benefit for his fellow men in their times of trouble or sickness. In how many instances could the simple mention of the words "ST. JACOBS OIL," coupled with terms of inducement and encouragement, bring relief and cure to those suffering with rheumatism. In view of the wonderful record of this Great German Remedy in the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia and all painful diseases, it appears in the light of strong duty for everyone to patiently, yet persistently, urge its application in the diseases named, bearing in mind that the highest good from man to man consists in that which tends to promote their peace, welfare and general health. Among others who have no hesitation in giving free expression to their opinion is Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, who has used the Great German Remedy ST. JACOBS OIL and endorses it highly. He writes about it as follows: "I am pleased to say that the use of ST. JACOBS OIL has benefited me greatly, and I have no hesitation to recommend it to all as an excellent curative."

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS, 3rd Wash. Ave. ST. LOUIS, MO., NOV. 23d, 1881.

MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS

Their manufacturers value this extraordinary distinction the more highly because of the importance of the occasion, especially as an INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION IN A COUNTRY SO EMINENTLY MUSICAL. The Mason & Hamlin Organs were honored by especial exhibition before the Court by CARLO DUCCI of Rome, and warm commendation from their Majesties, the King and Queen.

At all the great WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITIONS for fourteen years these Organs have received the HIGHEST HONORS, being the only American Organs which have received such at any.

IMPROVEMENTS. During the year just closed, this Company have introduced improvements of greater value than in any similar period since the introduction of the American Organ by them, years since.

ELEGANT STYLES are now received from their factories daily, surpassing in capacity and excellence anything which has before been produced, and certainly worthy to be ranked with the very best MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS IN THE WORLD. These are in cases of solid BLACK WALNUT, MAHOGANY, ASH, EBONIZED, at net cash prices, $240, $330, $360, $390, $480, $570, $840 and $900.

POPULAR STYLES, including, also, the most valuable of the recent improvements, and adapted to all uses, public and private, in plain and elegant cases, are at $22, $30, $57, $66, $72, $84, $93, $108, $114, to $200, and up.

EASY PAYMENTS. These organs are sold for cash or easy payments, or will be rented until rent pays for an organ.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, just issued, fully describing and illustrating MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED STYLES OF ORGANS, with net PRICE LISTS and circulars, will be sent free to any one desiring them. Certainly no one should buy or rent any Organ without having these circulars, which contain much useful information about organs.

To bear, to nurse, to rear,
To watch and then to lose:
To see my bright ones disappear
Drawn up like morning dews.
To bear, to nurse, to rear,
To watch and then to lose;
This have I done when God drew near
Among his own to choose.

To hear, to heed, to wed,
And with thy lord depart
In tears that he, as soon as shed,
Will let no longer smart.
To hear, to heed, to wed,
This while thou didst I smiled,
For now it was not God who said:
"Mother, give me thy child."

O fond, O fool, and blind,
To God I gave with tears;
But when a man like grace would find,
My soul put by her fears—
O fond, O fool, and blind,
God guards in happier spheres;
That man will guard where he did bind
Is hope for unknown years.

To hear, to heed, to wed,
Fair lot that maidens choose,
Thy mother's tenderest words are said,
Thy face no more she views,
Thy mother's lot, my dear,
She doth in naught accuse,
Her lot to bear, to nurse, to rear,
To love—and then to lose.

IN MY ENEMY'S HOUSE.

Story of Life in Russia, Translated from the Russian.

Traveling once near Moscow I chanced o meet N. Petrovitch, an old college hum. After some merry talk over our scrapes and adventures of former days e entreated me to accompany him to he house of his friend, Baron Staloff, at place about ten miles distant, adding, y way of persuasion: "Staloff is a fine, pen-hearted, generous, hospitable fellow, just such a man as you would like o meet; he told me to bring with me as any friends as possible. Come, we ill be there about a week. I can romise you a very agreeable visit."

Although a stranger to the Baron, as I hen thought, I yielded to my friend's equest, and we took the afternoon train, rriving at Staloff late in the day. The Baroness received us graciously, regretting that the Baron was unavoidably bsent until dinner.

Punctually at seven o'clock my friend nd I entered the magnificent dining oom. There was just time for a hasty ntroduction to the host before we took ur seats; we were about twenty at table.

"What is the matter with you," whispered Petrovitch, "you look so rightened: have you seen a ghost?"

"Frightened! I may well look so in-eed! I am frightened. Your fine, enerous, open-hearted Baron is my eadly enemy, than whom I would ather encounter a thousand ghosts. I ill tell you about it after dinner.

After an uncomfortable dinner I sueeded in finding an opportunity to speak o Petrovitch in private.

"That man and I were once friends," aid I, "but the old story, we both dmired the same girl. That made the rst breach between us. He proposed o settle the matter by the sword. I asily disarmed him. She jilted both of s for it and married Pavlovski, of the ragoons. Two years later the same hing happened. We fought again. I ounded him severely, and he swore earful vengeance upon me. But she arried him, and is his present wife. * * * But how has he become 'Baron Staloff?' When I knew him he was erely Gregorei Altoff."

"His uncle left him this property last ear with his name. He wisely took oth."

"If I had only known it! The man ates me and sees me present myself at is dinner-table. How soon can I get way?"

"Not to-night, I am sure. If you fear ny treachery, come spend the night in my room. But, really, the common ules of hospitality—"

"Oh, I don't believe in hospitality when it comes to a man of his nature. He has heard 'Macbeth,' and may imiate him—not for ambition, but to satsfy his cherished revenge."

"Well, I will speak to the servant, nd have your bags removed to my room efore bed-time."

"Thanks, old fellow."

The evening passed pleasantly by means of music and cards. The Baroness was charming, the Baron did not appear. Late in the evening my friend left on reeiving a message from the Baron to join im. Half an hour later a lackey made sign to me from the door. I turned to im.

"I am come, sir, to hand you this ey."

"I am to spend the night in my riend's room."

"Yes, sir, but a larger one has been repared for you two gentlemen whenver you are ready. Sir, I am at your ervice to show you the way to it."

"I am ready now; go on, I will folow." I followed him, as lamp in hand e went up a long, winding staircase nd along a narrow corridor until we eached what seemed to be a sort of ower. Here in a broad space, where were several doors, he stopped. "I uppose this part of the house is not ocupied."

"Oh, yes, sir, it is all occupied. Your oom is one of the best. This is it."

He opened the door of a large bare partment. On one side near a large, ld-fashioned bed I saw my traveling ag. "Your friend is here, sir, probaly," and he left me.

With the key in one hand and the amp in the other, I advanced to the fireplace. There was no fire, but one single andle stood on the mantel. This I ighted, but the darkness and gloom eemed impenetrable. "Petrovitch is not here," thought I, as I threw myself nto an immense arm-chair to wait for im. "What can delay him?"

I sat there until midnight. Still he id not come. Rousing myself then, I hought I heard the rattling of a chain. The fellow is somewhere here. Who else could make a noise?" Then I distinctly heard a regular breathing. "He must have fallen asleep somewhere. I will look for him." So, lamp in hand, I proceeded to explore the room. I reached further away than I had thought. * * * I heard the chain again. * * * What was my horror to behold, stretched at full length, fast asleep, beside his open cage, a splended tiger. The chain attached to his collar hung losely to the ground; he was free!

I rushed to the door. It was locked on the outside! to the windows, they were enormously high from the ground! There was no escape for me. There was the treachery I feared. This must be the trap of the generous, hospitable Baron! To call or make a noise might be useless, and would certainly arouse the animal. I had no pistols with me. I carefully and without any noise piled the chairs in one corner to serve as an ambush, reserving a stout little one as a weapon of defense. Then I sat down, keeping my eyes upon him. He lay cat-like, opening occasionally his drowsy eyes, sometimes giving his enormous head a shake. By degrees his sleepiness seemed to pass away, and with a frightful yawn he raised himself up and advanced toward me.

He paused for a moment and, raising his head, he snuffed the air as if aware of the presence of an intruder. With a growl he continued to advance cautiously, as if on his guard against a foe whose strength he was ignorant of. A few steps discovered me to him and, with a growl of rage, he crouched as if for the fatal spring. While I awaited in terror the fearful fate, which would be on me in a few seconds, I could not help admiring the excessive beauty of the animal, whose splendid stripes of black on his brown and orange skin and glaring eyeballs, as he lashed his sides with his tail, made him a perfect study. The quivering movement of his body told me that in a moment I would be torn to pieces without a chance of defense or escape. I closed my eyes for a second, and as I opened them he suddenly raised himself and stood with his head turned towards the door. Was any one coming to save me? I listened in vain for a footstep. Suddenly the soft music of a guitar broke upon the stillness. My first impression was that it meant another trick of the witty Baron, but to my intense relief the tiger with a pun of satisfaction laid himself down against the door in an attitude of attentive and delighted listening. Hour after hour passed away as the music continued without a moment's cessation and his highness the tiger remained subdued and quiet in his evident enjoyment of the sounds. This lasted until daylight, when the door was suddenly opened and a man entered armed with a heavy whip and a carbine. This was the tiger's keeper. At sight of him it crept lazily into its cage.

The man's surprise at seeing me was very great.

"The secret of this door," said he, "is known to the Baroness and myself alone."

I lost no time in escaping from my prison and soon reached the other part of the house. I found Petrovitch wandering about in search of me. I told him what had happened. "I must leave this house at once," said I.

"Stay to breakfast. Let the Baron see that you are alive and well. I shall so enjoy his surprise."

I did stay to breakfast. The Baron's yellow face turned green at the sight of me. The Baroness did not appear. After a month I heard of the Baron's sudden death. I called on the Baroness. She had known of the horrible design on my life. It was by her influence that the servant who confided his suspicions to her was induced to spend the night playing on the guitar, she having known that wild animals are tamed by musical sounds. She is now my wife. The tiger has been placed in a menagerie. I hope they will be as good to him as he was to me, and will feed him well, as I escaped doing!

Well-Known Phrases.

The term "blackguard" has a very common-place origin. In all great houses, particularly in royal residences, there were a number of mean and dirty dependents whose office it was to attend the wood-yard, sculleries, etc. Of these (for in the lowest depths there were lower still) the most forlorn wretches seem to have been selected to carry coal to the kitchen, hall and other apartments. To this smutty regiment, who attended the progresses, and rode in the carts with the pots and kettles, which, with every other article of furniture, were then moved from palace to palace, the people in derision gave the name of "blackguards"—a term since become sufficiently familiar. "To the bitter end" is clearly an old nautical expression. A dictionary published in the early part of the eighteenth century has "bite," a turn or part of a cable; "bitts," to mean pieces of timber to which a cable is fastened when a ship rides at anchor; "bitter," a turn of the cable about the timber called "bitts," that it may be veered out by little and little; and "bitter end" (of a cable) is that part which is wound about the "bitts" when a ship rides at anchor. The modern cant expression, "to the bitter end," may have taken its rise either from the old nautical words, as meaning the last coil of the cable, or from the last end, the very "bitter" dregs. It is a slang expression, another form of, "I will fight you to the death." In it "bitter" only means pitiless, severe, like a bitter east wind or a bitter foe.

"The Trapper's Last Shot."

He was probably christened James, but is always Jim now, and, along with the greater part of his christened name, he has almost entirely lost his surname. If he had been a few shades lighter, he might have been "Colored Jim," but black being the absorption of all color, this name would not fit him. So he is known, wherever known at all, as "Nigger Jim." He is an expert trapper and fisherman, but, rather singularly, considering these gifts, a poor marksman. For years he lugged about or carried in his boat an ancient flint-lock Queen's arm, so deadly in its action that it would kill pickerel with only a charge of powder, so Jim said; yet he rarely brought home any spoils of field or flood but such as were gained by trap or hook. Once, however, he made a very telling shot. It was on an October morning, and he was paddling his light trapping-skiff up the channel of Womakakatuk as silently as any Indian could, when, as he rounded a bend, he saw through the tall stalks of the wild rice at least a dozen ducks sitting among the lilly-pods in the edge of the channel, not six rods from him. Here was his long-sought opportunity, and no sooner did he descry them than a backward stroke of his paddle stopped the headway of the craft just before she poked her sharp nose in sigh of the unsuspecting fowl. Then he laid the paddle in the boat without the slightest noise, and as silently lifted from her resting-place his old gun, whose true inwardness at that moment consisted of all the powder in her owner's possession and a handful of B B shot, both wadded with a half-pound or so of waspnest. He cautiously thrust her muzzle through the rice stalks, cocked her without a tell-tale click of the ponderous lock, set the breech-plate firmly against his shoulder, laid his cheek to the stock, took such long and deliberate aim that a spider, setting his snare among the rushes, made fast an end of his web to the rusty barrel before Jim, shutting both eyes, set his teeth, and, with a sturdy pull, unhitched. There was a dazzling flash in the pan as if a kettle full of lard had caught fire, and then the noble weapon belched forth a horizontal column of flames and smoke, kicked Jim and his skiff half the boat's length astern, and gave a roar that went bellowing down the creek, across the lake, and was tossed back and forth from Split Rock Mountain to Shellhouse for five minutes before it lost its voice. When Jim got his eyes opened and his wits gathered, he peered through the eddying smoke and saw—not a feather raised, nor one wounded duck fluttering its last, but some riding unconcernedly with their heads knocked off, and some keel up in a quarter-acre of fine splinters. Then up rose two Boston men from among the rushes, and the fire, and smoke, and uproar, and vicious recoil of Jim's gun were as nothing to the vials of wrath which they poured out upon his curly, devoted head. Never was such paddling done on these waters as Jim did till he put half a mile of Wonakakatuk's channel, seething with his rapid strokes, between himself and the scene of bloodless slaughter. Then he shoved his boat into the rushes and skulled ashore. Next day he offered his gun for sale, giving as a reason that she burned so much powder no poor man could afford to keep her. He effected a sale at $1.50, and has done no duck-shooting since. He says with emphatic shakes of the head, "Any man that'll try to fool ducks with them wooden images will steal sheep! Yes, sir, course he will!"—Forest and Stream.

Sporting in Turkish Asia.

A party of English gentlemen crossed the Sea of Marmora and landed about forty miles from this city to hunt for game. They became separated in the course of the hunt, and one of the party, Commander Selby, of the English Navy, was accosted by a shepherd. The Englishman did not know Turkish, and thought that the shepherd wanted to beg some powder. So he remarked that he had no powder, and opened his cartridge-box to show that his ammunition was all in that form. But the shepherd had asked that no guns be fired near the sheep, and understood the exhibition of cartridges to be equivalent to a threat of violence. So he struck the Englishman over the head with his stick, and a struggle ensued. Commander Grenville, also of the English Navy, then came up and more shepherds appeared. The result was that Commander Selby, his skull broken by a terrible blow from an ax, and Commander Grenville, after three guns had been broken over his head, were bound and carried off to be executed by the shepherds. The English Consul-General at this city, Mr. Wrench, then appeared, and knowing Turkish, interposed in time to save the lives of the officers. The whole party then returned to the city, where Commander Selby lies in a most critical condition. The affair was the miserable result of a misunderstanding. It shows the folly of any attempt to travel in the country districts without a knowledge of the language, for it illustrates the ferocious passions aroused in the country people when they fancy themselves aggrieved. —Letter from Constantinople.

GEN. WADE HAMPTON and Senator John Sherman met in a barber shop, in Washington City, and had a regular row. A barber shop is just the place to razor row. It is the man who goes into a barber shop who is almost certain to get into a bad scrape and get lathered. —Texas Siftings.

SOUPS, according to Sir Henry Thompson, whether clear or thick, are far too lightly esteemed by most classes. They are too often regarded as a mere prelude to a meal, to be swallowed hastily or disregarded altogether.

Several South American States.

Transvaal was, until 1877, a republic, and was British territory, but had its independence restored in 1881, Great Britain retaining the suzerainty. The area is about 114,500 square miles, and the population includes about 40,000 persons of European descent, while the native Africans are estimated at all the way from 260,000 to 650,000. The chief exports are ostrich feathers, ivory, cattle, cereals, tobacco, etc. The heavy game in what is now Transvaal was only a few years ago found in numbers that are described as enormous, and the large mammalia are still numerous. The discovery of diamonds was made in 1866, north of the Vaal River, and since then diamond mining has been very successful in that district. The country also contains gold, copper, lead, iron, tin, and coal. There are several considerable towns. Mooiriverdorp, or Potschefstroom, Pretoria, Leydenburg, Rustenburg, and Zoutpausberg. The European inhabitants are chiefly emigrant farmers. Natal is on the southeast coast of Africa, 800 miles from the Cape of Good Hope. The colony, formerly a part of the Cape of Good Hope settlement, was in 1856 erected into a separate colony under the British crown, and until 1879 represented by a Lieutenant Governor, and since then by a Governor, who is assisted in the administration by an executive and legislative council. Its area is 21,000 square miles, with a seaboard of 150 miles; in 1880 the population was 406,625, about one in every sixteen being of European descent, and the remainder native Africans. The climate is salubrious, there being no extremes either of heat or cold; the coast region for about twenty-five miles inland is very fertile; sugar, coffee, indigo, arrowroot, ginger, tobacco, and cotton thrive; the midland district is better adapted to cereals and the usuals crops known among our people; on the higher plateau along the mountains, are immense tracts of pasturage, where cattle and sheep do well. There is one harbor on the coast, D'Urban or Port Natal. Among the natural resources are copper, coal, and iron; large forests of timber in the neighborhood of the mountains. Wool, sugar, ivory, and hides are exported. British Caffraria, or Kaffraria, as it is sometimes written, was wrested by the settlers of Cape Colony from the natives in the war af 1846-7, and is now a part or district of Cape Colony; its area is about 6,500 square miles. It is well watered, has many fertile valleys in the spurs of the mountains in the north, and is in some respects an attractive district. The European population is chiefly of British and German descent. In the year 1859 it was divided into farms of 1,000 to 3,000 acres, granted free on certain terms of settlement and defense. The last census reports place the population at about 125,000, of whom some 10 per cent. are of European descent. Zululand lies north of Natal, and receives its name from the tribes whose home it has been. A good deal of the country along the coast is very flat, marshy, and unhealthy. Up from the coast, where the level is higher, lies a generally fertile region, which is healthy, and where sugar, cotton, and other tropical products may be grown, as in the other colonies. There is quite a trade carried on by the traders from Natal in ivory, rhinoceros' horns, hides, etc. The Orange Free State has an area of 45,000 square miles and a population of 65,000. It is a republic, and the ruling people are the Boers. The climate is dry, temperate, and salubrious; the settlers are chiefly engaged in stock-raising; coal and iron have been found, also gold and the diamond-fields have attracted many to them in recent years. These several colonies and republics have generally an elevated surface, back from the coast, are more or less mountainous, have in the main a climate like that of Southern Europe, are well watered, but have few streams that are navigable.

Making Use of Natural Laws.

Instances of a more complex character frequently occur where a knowledge of natural laws or forces may be brought into operation to assist in surmounting difficulties. Thus, a few years ago, an iron bridge of considerable length, the weight being about 200 tons, was constructed in England and erected in a remote part of Germany. By some mishap, the bridge, when finished, was found to be some distance "out" to one side, an error which the proprietors insisted should be rectified. To take down and re-erect the bridge would be simply ruin to the contractor. But necessity is the mother of invention, and so it proved in this case. It was summer time, and the contractor proceeded to find the amount of expansion which was caused by the heat of the sun over the whole length of the bridge. He next ascertained what contraction took place in the night by cooling. Armed with these data, he thought it might be possible to bring the bridge to its proper position in a few days. The bridge, of course, in its ordinary condition expanded from the center, pushing its two ends outward, or farther apart, and again contracting toward the center. Taking advantage of these conditions, one end was made fast in the morning, and the bridge was forced to expand from that immovable point, instead of from the middle, as formerly. When the iron composing the bridge had expanded to its full extent in the direction intended, that end was released, and the opposite end made fast. The bridge then contracted toward its true position. Thus, whatever was gained by the day's expansion was secured by the subsequent contraction when the metal cooled at night, and, the process being renewed day by day, the work was successfully accomplished.

Dancing in Madagascar.

Just after sunset, and while I was still discussing my dinner, the tum-tums began to beat, and soon the clear space in the middle of the town presented an animated appearance. A sort of illumination was attempted by means of cocoa-nuts filled with bullock's fat, but they did not give much light and smelled very disagreeably. Mats had been placed under the old tamarind tree for the King and myself, and on repairing thither I found His Majesty already arrived. The people soon formed up for a dance. It was a very curious sight, and I never before saw any native dance quite like it. They all formed in a circle, and sang, apparently, a verse of a song. They then went in turns into the center of the ring and danced wildly round, flourishing their spears and singing, and then they all joined in a sort of chorus. I fancy the solo singing was extempore. The women did not take part in this dance, but all sat together and beat time with their hands, and then at the finish they came forward with calabashes full of rum and presented them to the men. They danced the same dance three or four times, never omitting the rum at the end. His Majesty kept pressing me also to drink, and I had to take far more of it than I wanted. The women now came forward and danced, the dance consisting of swinging the body backward and forward, all the time singing a plaintive sort of melody. I could not help thinking how well the words from Les Cloches de Corneville—"Just look at that," &c.—would have suited the action. They looked very picturesque with their bright-colored lambas and wild-looking heads. They have long, woolly hair, which they make stick out from the head in little knobs. After the women had been dancing thus for some time (the men sitting down and beating time), a man most grotesquely painted jumped in between them and danced a few times up and down the middle; then the women screamed and ran away, and the men, jumping up and brandishing their spears in the most threatening manner, rushed forward as if to attack the new-comer. He at once bolted down the street. I afterward found out that he represented a lolo (ghost), come to carry off one of the women. After he had disappeared there was a general dance of rejoicing, in which both men and women joined, and after that more rum. It was now long past ten, so I asked permission of the King to retire to my hut. He replied, rather huskily, that it was very early, but gave me leave to go. He also promised me some guides to take me out in the morning.—Temple Bar.

The Philosopher and the Flea.

This is the tale of the philosopher and the flea:

1. The former, having been bitten by the latter, seized and was about to dispatch his foe, when he reflected that the little insect had only acted from instinct, and was not to be blamed. Accordingly he deposited the flea on the back of a passing dog.

2. This dog was the poodle of a lady, and she was very fond of the pretty animal. On his return to the house his mistress took him upon her lap to caress him, and the flea embraced his opportunity to change his inhabit.

3. The flea having in the course of the night engaged in active business operations, awakened the lady. Her husband was sleeping peacefully beside her, and in the silence of her chamber she heard him in his dreams whisper with an accent of ineffable tenderness a name! The name was that of her most intimate female friend!!

4. As soon as it was day, the outraged wife hurried to the house of her rival, and told the rival's husband of the big, big, d—ing discovery she had made. He, being a man of decision, at once called out the destroyer of his household's peace, and ran him through.

5. The widow, when her husband was taken home to her upon the medium of a shutter, was so terribly smitten with remorse that she precipitated herself from the fourth-story window.

6. The other lady convinced her husband that he had wronged her by entertaining any suspicions as to her fidelity, and, becoming reconciled with him, seized an early opportunity of poisoning him.

7. Inasmuch as the jurors of that country had never heard of "extenuating circumstances," and the chief magistrate thought that he could put a murderer to better uses than not guillotining him, the guilty woman was duly decapitated, and the sole survivors of the tragedy were the philosopher and the flea.

MR. LABOUCHERE says: "A French writer would be regarded as an ignorant person were he to make a fault in grammar, whereas an English writer would be looked upon as somewhat of a purist were he not often to do so. I remember when I, as a boy, was taught English composition I was told never to finish a phrase with a word of one syllable, and never to put three words of one syllable together."

THE blacksmith often injures the woodwork of a carriage by fitting his irons when too hot. If the wood burns ever so little it weakens it, and if a joint is near the latter is sure to open. A blacksmith that cannot fit an iron without depending upon its burning its way down should never be allowed to work at the forge.

FOUR-FIFTHS of the animals on the globe, or 200,000 species, belong to the ringed and jointed-footed animals, and of these 150,000 are the six-legged insects.

EXPOSURE of hot steel to a cold surface renders it hard. This is usually done by dipping the red-hot metal in water, though other cold surfaces which are rapid conductors will answer the same purpose.

IN Holland the preservation of the woodwork of drawbridges, sluices, gates and other works is conduced by the application of a mixture of pitch and tar, whereon are strewn pounded shells, with a mixture of sea sand.

WHEN rivers are much warmer than the air they give rise to fogs, because the rapid evaporation from the warm water pours more water into the atmosphere than it can hold suspended in an invisible state, and consequently the surplus vapor is condensed into mist by the colder air into which it rises. There are conditions of atmosphere when no actual fog is apparent in which darkness prevails, and what are called dry fogs, or sometimes blight. In some cases they are clearly due to smoke, as, for instance, the smoke of burning prairies, which may extend over vast distances.

THE waters of the ocean are found to be of an almost uniform saltness, the proportion of salt being 2.7 per cent., which gives a pound of salt (about) to every four gallons of water. The quantity of saline ingredients contained in the sea, according to the late Mr. Mudie, amounts to four hundred thousand billions of cubic feet, which, if piled up, would form a mass 140 miles long, as many broad and as many high—or, otherwise disposed, it would cover the whole of Europe, islands, seas and all, to the height of the summit of Mount Blanc, which is about 16,000 feet.

THAT the Mississippi may deservedly be called the "Father of Waters" the following data will show: Quantity of water discharged by that river annually, 14,883,360,633,880 cubic feet; quantity of sediment discharged annually, 28,188,083,892 cubic feet; area of the delta of the river, according to Lyell's estimate, 13,000 square miles, and depth of the same, as calculated by Prof. Riddell, 1,056 feet. The delta, consequently, as appears from these figures, contains 400,378,429,440,000 cubic feet, or 2,720 cubic miles, and it would require for the formation, therefore, of one cubic mile of delta five years and eighty-one days—for the formation of one square mile, of the depth of 1,056 feet, one year sixteen and one-fifth days, and for the formation of the whole delta 14,208 4-5 years.

Tourists Who Infest Egypt.

The Builder, quoting a correspondent of the Debats, censures the conduct of certain tourists who infest Egypt. They "increase in numbers every year; reports of revolution, insubordination in the army, and cholera are powerless to hinder them; and those easy means of communication, the steamers that now run frequently up and down the Nile, bring in larger numbers than ever the strangers to see the ruins. Their presence, however, is, we are sorry to hear, deeply regretted by the genuine archæologist. In the thirty years that Egypt has been thus visited, more harm has been done to its old buildings than in the centuries of so much abused neglect which have passed over the country. The destruction caused by the tourists is really serious; piece by piece the inscriptions and the wall paintings have been chipped away to supply 'mementoes.' M. Charmes describes how, on visiting a few days previously the Valley of the Kings, he found most barbarously mutilated the famous tomb of Seti I., which was discovered by Belzoni; the alabaster sarcophagus is, it will be remembered, at present in Sir John Soane's Museum. When Belzoni and Champollion entered the tomb it was intact; not a word of the inscribed text was wanting; the wall paintings were as fresh in color as if painted the day before; now the tomb is nearly a ruin, and in a few years the destruction will be complete." We may add to the remonstrances of our contemporary the questions, How is it possible to censure this wanton and petty mischief when the removal of noble obelisks to London and New York is thought worthy of public applause and national honors? What is the difference in stupidity between knocking off the nose of a statue, defacing a tomb, or ravaging an inscription and carrying away one or more of the few obelisks left?—London Athenæum.

A PROMINENT physician says that, if mothers did not take up the senseless prattle of babies and hurl it back at them under the plea that it is "baby talk," children would learn sooner how to talk plain. They repeat the jumble of syllables that they first hear. That's the idea! Instead of saying of soapy water: "I doesn't 'ike it, it tastes dood," you can just as well have Mr. Two-year-old observe: "The taste of soap combined with aqueous fluid is not agreeable to me."

The End of Guiteau.

Giteau was hung at high noon on last Friday. Only a few persons were permitted to witness the execution. The prisoner is reported to have passed a restless night previous to the day of his execution. Telegrams state that on rising in the morning of that day, he ate a hearty breakfast, and ordered his dinner to be brought to him at 11 o'clock. He conducted himself with all the nonchalance he could command, and went to the scaffold with a firm step and erect head. Upon the scaffold he delivered what he termed his "dying prayer," and then proceeded to chant a few verses he had written, the substance of them being, "I am going to the Lordy, I am so glad; I am going to the Lordy, glory hallelujah, I am going to the Lord."

After this recital, the noose was adjusted, the black cap pulled over his head, and while the prisoner was yelling "glory, glory, glory," the trigger was sprung and the drop fell; and a soul was launched into a never ending world, to be judged of Him who gave it.

Thus ends the life of one of the most remarkable criminals on record. Whether or not he was responsible for his deeds, only the great I Am can know. He is gone, and his crime, if such it may be called, has been atoned for with his blood. May his fate be an awful warning to all other would be assassins, and if his terrible taking off should result in the lessening of such crimes, it is well indeed that he has died.

The Campaign in Alabama.

One disadvantage of overwhelming political power, such as is possessed by the Democratic party in Alabama and several other States is that it relegates the contest for office to the nominating convention, and brings before that body a great number of candidates who would keep to their precincts if there were any doubt of the result at the polls. In Alabama the entire list of State officers named at Montgomery will be elected at the polls, carrying in their train a United States Senator and probably eight Representatives to Congress. Owing to the multiplicity of aspirants the convention occupied two days in arriving at a determination. For Governor were nominated Gen. Edward A. O'Neal, of Lauderdale; Hon. Leroy Brewer, of Mobile; Hon. N. H. R. Dawson, of Dallas; Hon. John M. McKleroy, of Barbour. Gen. O'Neal, the nominee of the convention, is popular in North Alabama, and as the Greenbacker Lowe has made considerable inroads on the white Democratic strength of that section, it was probably a prudent and shrewd act in the convention to put the head of the battle in that part of the field. McKleroy was enthusiastically supported by East Alabama, and on one ballot attained 146 votes and a fraction of 14-20ths. Brewer started with 93 and 5-20ths votes. Dawson was strong in Central Alabama, and had at one time 115 and 1-20th. But O'Neal was never headed, and ran the race through well to the front without a break.

Among those who are mentioned for United States Senator, in place of Gen. Morgan, we notice ex-Gov. Thos. H. Watts, Hon. Walter L. Bragg, Gen. John D. Rother, and, probably, may reckon Morgan himself. Alabama is not notable for rewarding her prominent politicians with long place. The policy of frequent changes, bad as it is, seems to please the people, and breeds an army of candidates.

We suppose that Mobile will retire Col. Herndon, who is in the prime of life (about 54), carries the scars of honorable battles, and has sinned grievously already by holding two terms. He has attained some reputation as a representative, however, which may console him in his retirement. We do not dare to name his successor, because we should inevitably offend a couple of hundred most estimable gentlemen, whose residence in the First District renders their selection not impossible.

We venture to suggest to our Alabama neighbors the real secret why New England's influence at Washington has always been larger than her relative importation in the Union is because when she finds that she has secured a good Representative or Senator she rarely ever takes him home again. We don't need to give examples, because they are abundant and well known. The South ought to make her great sons fixtures at Washington, and treat them as a wise master treats his hired servants, whose greater gain, whose services he never dispenses with except for cause.

At the last Gubernatorial election Governor Cobb received more than three-fourths of the votes—134,911 against 42,343 for Pickens, Greenbacker.—N. O. Picayune.

Thanks to "Rufus." If he will call on "Doceo," when he visits our village, he will "set up" to cigars; but he has none of the musical instruments inquired after, either to sell, lease or let, but we have almost anything else he can call for from a mosquito to a donkey.

The Chilton Co. Medical Board met in Jemison, the 3d inst. A good turn out of the physicians of the county and an interesting meeting is reported.

At a regular communication of Jemison Lodge, No. 411, of A. F. & A. M., the following officers were installed, Prof. J. L. Williams wielding the gavel, Prof. A. E. Burns, presenting the candidates: Dr. J. J. Dawson, W. M.; L. J. Hand, S. W.; S. J. Heath, J. W.; J. M. Brantley, Treas.; S. E. Clecker, Sec.; J. Bice, S. D.; A. Patterson, J. D.; and J. B Childers, Tyler.

Died, on the 24, inst., little Charley, and on the 25th, Birdie, infant son and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H. Smith.

Our school closed out last Wednesday, the 28th ult. Quite a goodly number of patrons and friends turned out to witness the closing exercises. Mr. Burns will teach a "vacation session," commencing the 17th inst. A full school is anticipated.

Immigrant and Tribune: The southbound train, Sunday, brought sixty-two immigrants direct from Saxony, Germany. They are farmers, some with capital, and most of them with means to render them self-sustaining for one year. They are a hardy looking set, and just such men as are needed to open up and develop a new country. They have a brass band and make good music. They are now prospecting for homes in the country and the Messrs. Cullman are exerting themselves to get them properly located. As many more are looked for in about eight days.

Fort Payne Journal: A farmer in this county sold of his last year's crop of corn to the amount of $2,300, cotton to the amount of $600, besides meat and other articles, making in all nearly $4,000. The highest price at which he sold corn was 85 cents. Some he sold at 60. Another farmer living not very many miles from this place, has been farming about thirty years, and in all that time he has not bought a pound of meat or flour or a bushel of corn. He has a good home, good stock, all the comforts and some of the luxuries of life, and has improved and constantly increased the productive capacity of his farm. He has never raised as much as a bale of cotton all together.

A Riot Between the Races in Florida.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., July 1.
The Union has just received the particulars of a fatal rencounter between the whites and blacks at Brooksville. Three colored men, named Turner, had been for several days visiting the village armed and indulging in threats against some citizens, making much bad feeling. This culminated a few days since in a row in the courthouse, started by one of the Turners entering the building, just as the afternoon session of the court was being called, with an open knife in his hand. In the row that followed the three Turners were killed and several other negroes participating were wounded. Several whites were wounded, but not mortally.

Clanton Academy.

This excellent school closed its first session last week, with examinations during the day and declamation exercises in evening of Thursday and Friday. The exercises were well conducted, and were very interesting, and reflected credit upon pupils and principal. The next regular session of the school will open on the first Monday in October, and the prospect for a full attendance, is, we learn, very flattering. We regret that our space will not permit us to publish a programme of the exercises.

Verbena to Have An Academy.

On last Saturday a meeting of prominent citizens was had at Verbena, for the purpose of considering the question of building an Academy. About $1,750 was subscribed, and a suitable building will be erected at once. This is a move in the right direction, and we are only surprised that it has not been undertaken before. It is indeed gratifying to note such evidences of improvement in the county, and especially so in this case, where the cause of education is to be benefited thereby. The Academy will be ready to begin its first session in October, and we doubt not that it will be a splendid institution of its kind. Success to it and its projectors.

The Glorious Fourth.

The barbecue at Cooper's Station, on Tuesday, was largely attended, and was a success in every particular. About one thousand people were on the grounds. Capt. W. A. Gullahorn was one of the leading spirits and took particular pains to make the occasion enjoyable to all. A good band was on hand, and the young folks passed the greater part of the time in dancing to its inspiring music. Short speeches were made by Messrs. Edwards and Hall, candidates for legislative honors. An excellent dinner of barbecued meats was spread, and ice cream and lemonade, as well as "red-eye" was disposed of rather more freely than was necessary. Nothing unusual occurred to mar the enjoyment of the occasion, and the "glorious fourth" at Cooper's will be long remembered by those who were so fortunate as to be present.

Maplesville Dots.

Plenty of rain last week. Crops are much revived and promise a good harvest. Mr. Boline says he has one of the best crops he ever knew.

"Bijou" had his first watermelon this week, and would send our editor some but distance prevents.

We are informed that Rev. Mr. Rogers will fill the pulpit at this place for the balance of the year. Only one sermon has been preached here since the first Sunday in August of last year.

Robt. DuBose, a young mulatto aged about 27 years, died on the 1st. He was a remarkably intelligent colored man.

"Rufus" can find a few of the "organs" of which he inquires in this town. "Bijou" has never had any conjugal experience, and can offer him no sympathy.

Mr. Thos. DuBose has now a barbed wire fence on his farm. The first, we believe, in the neighborhood. BIJOU.

The Power of Prayer.

Hast thou climbed ambition's height,
Man of genius, man of might;
Seeing from thy lofty seat
All life's storms beneath thy feet,
Empire spread before thine eye,
Homage, fear, and flattery?—
Amid the sounds that reach thee there,
Kneel, and seek the power of prayer,

Hast thou, in life's lonliest vale,
Seen thy patient labors fail,—
Felt ill-fortune's daily thrill
Waste thine energy of will?
Yet without revenge or hate,
Wouldst thou stand the stroke of fate?
Wouldst thou bear as man should bear?
Kneel, and seek the power of prayer?

Hast thou, man of intellect,
Seen thy soaring spirit checked,
Struggling in the righteous cause,
Champion of God's slighted laws,
Seen the slave or the supine,
Win the prize that should be thine?
Wouldst thou scorn and wouldst thou spare?—
Kneel and seek the power of prayer.

Hast thou stood beside the bed,
Where the gentle spirit fled?
Sharer of life's hopes and fears,
Youth's first passion, love of years,
Saint on earth and saint above,
Life of life and love of love;
Wouldst thou shun the last despair?—
Kneel and seek the power of prayer.

The name of the new town to be built up between Dixie and Maplesville has been agreed upon as "Miniola," we learn, and we hope the town will be as pretty and as pleasant as its name. We learn some 15 or 20 families will soon have summer cottages there. It is most pleasantly located for a summer retreat.—Selma Index.

"Is the point well taken?" asked a member of the convention. "Gewhilikins, yes!" shouted a member near by, springing to his feet. Some one had left a pin with a view to just such a coincidence.

Farmers' Boys.

Much indeed is said about boys leaving the farm and going to some city to attend a business college. Some people think, that a farmer's son has "no business" at a business college. And if he goes, he fully believes he will command, as soon as his course is completed a hundred dollar salary; and he goes for no other purpose. Some believe a farmers boy can't be a farmer if he attends a business college. To these I would say, a farmers boy needs a business education as much as any other class of boys. How can a farmer keep his books, unless he first learn how? Or, how will he know that his merchant with whom he trades, keeps his store account correctly? No, its their belief, that a farmers boy needs no education. They need only know, when and how, to plant corn and cotton, and when to set out potato plants, whether or not it be on the change of the moon, or on the ridges prepared for them. They must depend on somebody else to transact their business, and keep their accounts, and while others are attending to their business for them, it is others business to make money out of their business, and they do it. Farmers should send their boys to college, that they may learn to transact any business, that may come before them. Do not think because they have an education, they cannot farm. I am a little surprised at some people! I reckon I need not be.

Only those will refuse to send to college
Who never themselves attended,
For only those will acknowledge,
To them, business is uncomprehended.

The Mule—A Boy's Composition.

The mewl is an anermul which wus born after Noer built the ark. The rinoserus wus in the ark, but there ain't no account of the mewl being there, an' I guess he wusn't, 'cos he would've bruised around in it an' made trouble. Noer landed on Mount Arerat, but if the mewl had been in the ark there ain't no telling where Noer would've landed. The chances are he would've been kilt by the mewl 'cos a mewl don't like to be cooped up; it ain't in his nater. Mount Arerat is a big hill in the Holy Land, and there Noer turned loose the unerkorn an' the lamb, an' the liuns roared.

If I ain't wrong, Mount Arerat was the place where the profit Eliger flew up in a blaze of fire. Sum boys who go craw fishin' on Sunday call the profit Lige. I've got a dog named Lige. He is a brindle bulldog and won't back down for a cirkular saw. Dad bought him from Jim Jone's unkle. Jim Jone's grandma is hip-shot, an' shouts at camp meetin's. Dad bought the dog to keep the niggers outen the watermelon patch, an' it's wrong to call the profit Lige. Bad boys ain't got no respect for the profits no how. I'm the head in my Sunday-school class. Deakun Smith owned a big roan mewl, an' he had a wart on his leg an' a Roman nose. A man named Wilkins who loafes around tryin' to get on kurriner's juries tole Deakun Smith to pull a hair outen the mewl's tail, and tie it round the wart, an it would come off in two days. Deakun Smith pulled the hair outen the mewl's tail. Doctor Jimson ses that Deakun Smith won't be able to pass the contribushin box fur two weeks. He wus kicked through a bord fence in the stummick and fell in a was' nest bigger'n a door mat.

Dr. J. P. Givhan, late of Selma, dropped into the Index office last week. The Doctor informed us he was located permanently at Lomax, Chilton county, with the prospect of a lucrative practice. He is fully competent to perform his duty as a physician. We say to our friends in that part of the country, he is in every way reliable.

A QUIET LITTLE GAME.

Jerry Greening's Account of a Transaction with Cards on a Pullman Car.

"Playin' poker is mighty dang'rous bizness, boys," said old Jerry Greening the other night, as he came into the Williamson House barroom.

Some of "the boys" were indulging in a little game of draw poker, with a limit, just to pass away the time. Judge Ridgway, the champion sucker fisherman of this region, asked Jerry if he would take a hand. "No, thankee," said the veteran yarn spinner as he helped himself to a "chaw" of Lije Pelton's tobacco; "I ain't a takin' in keerd playin' nowadays. Ef you fellers 'll lay down yer keerds I'll chuck pennies to see who pays fer the drinks all around, an' then I'll tell ye a leetle story 'bout poker playin'."

The cards were laid down, the coins were pitched, and "Si" Terwilliger was the unfortunate one. Reinforced with a tumbler of "gin and tansy," the old man took off his slouch hat and heavy muffler and prepared to spin the promised yarn.

"Lem'me see," started Jerry, "I guess it were nigh about 'leven year 'go I were goin' out West with a party o' city folks to hunt on th' prairies. We was a trav'lin' in powerful fine style in one o' tham pallet keers, when we see a real nice lookin' feller with a di'mond buzzum-pin come into the keer. He sot down near me, an' bineby he got the owner of the keer—which I remarked to the time was a nigger—to get a table for him. He got a playin' keerds all 'lone by hisself, and bineby 'nother nice lookin' feller came in, an' them two fellers got a-playin'. Arter awhile the two city fellers that were goin' out West with me took a hand in th' game, an' 'fore we got to Chicago my two fellers hadn't 'nough spondulix 'round 'em to buy a square drink o' licker, let 'lone 'nough to go furder West. Fin'lly one o' my men—I allers calls 'em my men, becase they was goin' West with me, yer know—said to th' feller with the di'mond buzzum-pin, 'Let's change the game. I've got jest $3,000 cash in my grip-sack, that b'longs to my old man in Chicago; let's play eucher for a change.' 'Now, I'll tell ye what I'll do,' said th' buzzum-pin man; 'I'll jest bet ye even $3,000 thet I kin take them keerds an' cut the jack o' hearts the very first time.' 'By darn, I'll do it,' says my man. 'Wall,' sez I, 'I'll hold the stakes.' 'All right,' sez the buzzum-pin man. During this little conversation my man were shufflin' up the keerds kinder nervous like, so he had laid 'em down an' told me to keep an eye on 'em while he got his cash. He come back with the money an' handed it to me. Mr. Buzzum-pin got out his cash, but with what he hed won from my man an' what money he hed he were short jest $100. 'Wal,' sez I, 'rather than see yer fun broke up I'll lend ye th' hundred.' So I pulls out a nole stockin' I hed in my grip-sack an' got out five twenty-dollar gold pieces. 'Thar,' sez I, 'now get down to biz.'

"Wall, they got. Mr. Buzzum-pin took th' keerds in his han's an' drawin' a bowie-knife outen his hip pocket he cut them keerds right in two quicker'n lightnin'. 'Thar,' sez he, 'I cut th' Jack o' hearts th' fust time, mister, an' I reckon that I'll freeze onto that thar cash. Fork her over, mister,' sez he to me. Jest 'bout that time I see th' pint o' the scheme, an' I laffed till I putty nigh busted. I gist got down onto the floor an' laffed, an' 'twere close t' five minutes 'fore I got cooled down agin. I were just ready to pay the buzzum-pin man th' $3,000 cash, an' his face were as smilin' as a man's is when he looks at his fust baby, when all t' oncet my man sez: 'Mr. Greening, I reckon you'll pay that huge pile over t' me.' 'The 'greement was that I were t' cut th' jack th' fust time,' sez Buzzin-pin, 'an' I done it, so I'll take the dough, if you please. I cut it, didn't I?' 'Wall, no,' sez my man, pullin' the jack o' hearts outen his left sleeve, 'I reckon not!' Wall, boys, ef you could a seen that feller's face drop you'd smile a smile. The first thing he done were to reach out for his shootin'-iron, but my man sez: 'Oh, don't do that,' an' kinder raisin' the lapboard they were playin' on, he showed Mr. Buzzum-pin a six-shooter pintin' in th' direction o' his heart, an' 'twere full cocked, too. 'Wall, I'm dun brown for once,' says the buzzum-pin man, an' sez he: 'Who be ye, anyway, stranger?' 'Wall,' sez my man, 'I don't mind 'bliging ye with my cog'omen. I'm Billy Birdsall of New York, an' I'm the man thet invented that little scheme o' cuttin' th' jack, an' now, m' friend, I'll giv ye a leetle piece of advice. I let ye win all m' cash so I could clean you out. Ef I'd a tried t' clean ye at poker I could a done it, but you'd a stopped a playin' 'fore ye got broke, so I laid for ye. After this when yo're goin' t' cut the jack, don't let any one handle the keerds fust. Mr. Greening will give ye $50 outen th' stakes an' I guess you'd better light out at Chicargo, an' ye want t' keep yer eye peeled fer ye know them Chicargo people's noted for their big feet, an' they ain't in any way delicate 'bout using 'em ef they gets skinned by a sharper. Good evening?'

Wall, I paid the buzzum-pin man his $50 an' he got out at Chicargo. Me an' them two fellars hed a good laff over the way we flaxed him, an' since that I hain't played no keerds. Of course I don't s'pose any of you fellers 'll cheat at keerds, and I've no 'jections to playin' with you, though I did see Bill Oarkuff slippin' a nace down into his lap to lay for a nace full. Ye see now, boys, why I don't play no keerds. Let's chuck agin for the drinks an' then I guess I'll go home, for I've got to try a case for salt an' batter' to-morrer mornin' 'fore 'Squire Dewitt."

Having "chucked" for and disposed of his drink, Jerry bade the crowd good night and started for home, and the game of poker was renewed.

A CROCODILE outdone: A crocodile stole a baby once in the days when animals could talk, and was about to make a dinner of it. The poor mother begged piteously for her child. "Tell me one truth," said the crocodile, "and you shall have your baby again." The grief-stricken mother thought for a moment and then said, between her sobs: "I shall buy a new bonnet next spring." "Take the baby," said the alligator, clubbing himself as he spoke, "I am not ... enough for you."—Chicago Tribune.

THE LITTLE MORMON MAID-SERVANT.

When we came to live as Gentiles among the Mormons in Utah, the first difficulty we met after establishing our household, was in finding servants.

The first cook we hired, at exorbitant wages, was a Chinaman; but as these Celestials have neither godliness nor the next thing to it, my wife soon discharged him, and I came home one evening to find that he had packed up his things—and a good many of ours—and was gone.

We had a young China-boy for housemaid, but he allowed himself to be influenced by his discharged fellow-servant and took French leave the next day. Misfortunes never come singly, nor go singly.

My wife now began to walk the town over in search of a girl. Women-servants, especially young girls, it is difficult for Gentile families to procure in some parts of Utah, particularly in towns off the railroads, where the Mormons retain their great prejudice against the "foreign element," as the Gentiles are called, and rarely allow their daughters to go out to service in Gentile families, for fear the young saints will be estranged from the church, or "contaminated by the world's people," as the Mormons express it. Besides, there are not many young girls in the Mormon church. They are advised to marry young, and Mormon men are encouraged to marry a number of wives. The more wives each man takes the greater his power in the church.

But my wife's search for a servant was repaid by introducing her to the quaint interiors of a number of Mormon houses to which she had been advised to go, and for several days we had little conversation at meals beside a description of these interiors; and they were not always appetizing.

Some of the houses to which her search led her were the homes of Scandinavian converts to Mormonism, houses of one room, built either of rough, red granite boulders, or of dull adobes; inside carpeted with loose straw; the little square windows curtained with short white conventual curtains, gathered on rods at the top and bottom.

In many instances a shelf is hinged against the wall, and serves as a clothless dinner-table, and can afterwards be dropped flat against the wall by folding its prop, thus making more room in the hampered quarters.

Some of these houses are enclosed by rush-woven fences, made of switches braided horizontally between upright posts. These fences, looking like the woven willow cradles in texture give a foreign appearance to the streets they border, and are so close-weft that a child could not find an aperture large enough to thrust its little hand through to pluck the flowers inside.

But the queer fences seemed also to guard the young girls in the families as well as they did the flowers, and my wife was unsuccessful in her search. The Mormon mothers all told her there had been a rule recently made in the church that all young girls under the age of sixteen, instead of going out to service, must go to school, for the Mormons have educational establishments, but they are schools where "knowledge comes, but wisdom lingers," being mere instruments for the diffusion of Mormon doctrine.

At last, after days of fruitless effort, we found at our very door that for which we had searched far and wide. It chanced that the Mormon Bishop, from whom we rented our house, lived in a rambling house of rough and red granite, next door to us. He had built his houses on adjoining lots, and had a wife and family living in each house; but jealousy sprang up between the two wives, and the Bishop removed the youngest and favorite wife to the country, and rented to us her vacated house.

One morning, while we were still without a servant, my wife chanced to step into the Bishop's first wife's house, next door, to see about having some repairs made upon our house. Nothing but an errand ever takes a Gentile lady into one thought was that the woman made the offer simply to oblige us temporarily, and she was about to decline it with thanks, when, after a glance over the poverty-stricken room, she concluded that the offer came from pecuniary necessity instead of pure kind-heartedness, and at once closed the bargain. Apparently this Bishop pinched his first wife's family to indulge the second wife's, for he was a man of some consideration in the church, and must have had means to support one family well.

When I returned home that evening I found a young "Saint" established in the place of our departed Celestial.

It seemed to give our little Mormon girl delight so disproportioned in effect to the cause that she was questioned by one of the children, why she seemed so happy. She answered that if she had not got a home with us, she was about to have been obliged by her father to go to live with his second wife, where she would have had hard work; would have lived in the country, which she disliked, and would have received no wages. In the poorer Mormon families it is customary for the first wife and her children to become virtually servants to the second wife and her children. The children of one wife call all the other wives of their father "Aunt."

Our little Mormon maid's name was Julie. She speedily became a great favorite with the children of our family who ate with her at the second table, and learned from her some primitive table manners. At dinner, on her first evening in our service, the children discovered that it was against the rules of the Mormon church to drink either tea or coffee, and Julie never tasted either while she lived with us.

On the first Sunday night Julie was with us, she was undressing the younger children in the nursery while their mother was hearing them recite their catechism. One of the children was asked—

"Paul, who made you?"

And he answered "God."

The next question in the catechism is: "Are there more God's than one?"

And again he answered properly, "No, there is but one God."

At this Julie looked up astonished, and as if thinking Paul's catechiser was abstracted and allowing him to recite wrong, Julie said, timidly: "Paul answered that question wrong, ma'am."

"What must I say?" lisped Paul, bewildered.

Julie answered, "You must say, 'Yes, there are many Gods.'"

Paul's mother protested against her of these Occidental harems. While there she happened to remark her great need of a servant, and was much astonished at the novel experience of having our landlord's wife offer with alacrity one of her numerous and ill-supported daughters for the situation. Her first boy's learning this false doctrine, and Julie protested that it was true, and as proof, went to her room and brought out her well-worn Mormon catechism as an end to the controversy; pointing to the question, the answer was truly as she had said, "There are many Gods." Mormonism teaches a plurality of Gods as well as wives.

Julie endeared herself to the children, for she had that first qualification of a good nurse—she was a fine story teller. By the hour she would entertain the little folks, and their mother, too, with quaint tales of her old home in Sweden; wonderful, fairy-like stories of the baroness to whom Julie's mother was dressing-maid until a Mormon missionary had converted her. She related gruesome tales of how her father and mother, after crossing the ocean to this country, walked with an emigrant train across the prairies from Omaha to Salt Lake, and of the adventures they met in this three months' walk.

Julie delighted in taking the children out airing, and brought them home with their hands full of wild flowers, some of which have received curious names. One, a yellow, daisy-like flower, Julie said was called the "Mormon biscuit," because when the first Mormons who came into Salt Lake Valley ran out of provisions while waiting for their first crop, they were obliged for a while to live on the roots of this weed in lieu of bread.

The children went one Sunday afternoon to the Mormon Tabernacle with Julie. The communion consisted of broken bread and water, and was distributed indiscriminately among the people assembled, both to Mormons and strangers. Little babes received it.

When they came home from church, little Paul provoked the good tempered Julie by innocently asking if the women sat on one side of the aisle and the men on the other, so the several wives of each man would not quarrel about which one would sit next to the husband.

Julie seemed very anxious to proselyte and make us converts to Mormonism. She said to my wife, one day, in a burst of gratitude after receiving some slight favor from her, "Oh, ma'am, you are too good and kind to be a Gentile."

Her mistress suggested that she would not like to divide her husband among several more wives; but Julie answered, shaking her head sorrowfully—

"Oh, Gentile ladies are so jealous. Don't you know the more wives a man takes, the higher up he goes in Eternal Glory, and carries them up with him? If a man has but one wife, when they die they only go to the moon, but each plural wife will take him to a higher star in 'Glory.'"

This argument may indicate a belief that the more a man suffers on earth, the greater will be his reward hereafter. Julie, however, saw that my wife cared to go no further than the moon, and ceased trying to move her from her lunacy.

It is a common saying among Gentiles that Mormons are taught it is no harm to steal from Gentiles; that rather it is good to punish their "heresy" by worrying them in every possible way, and that to steal from them is praiseworthy; but we found little Julie perfectly honest, and she only left us to become the fourth wife of an old bishop, who was already married to a widow and her twin daughters.—K. D. Forgeron in Youths' Companion.

IT was a woman—Madame Darnet, the wife of a French surgeon—who discovered at St. Grieix the bed of kaolin which first gave France the material for the manufacture of real china, hard porcelain, instead of the tender, porous stuff before made. Madame received no recompense until far advanced in years, and when she became the victim of poverty a scanty pension was allowed her.

Badly Afflicted.

"My boy was badly afflicted with rheumatism," said Mr. Barton, of the great stove firm of Redway & Barton, of this city, to one of our reporters. "We doctored him a great deal, but could find no cure; I had heard so much of the efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil that I finally determined to try it. Two bottles of the Oil fully cured him."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Might Learn From the Mound Builders.

Everywhere in the Mississippi delta are to be found traces of engineering skill of the mysterious race vaguely called "mound builders." Artificial elevations, miles of canals and long stretches of low-protecting levees are to be seen in nearly every county bordering on the river from Cairo to New Orleans. Would not modern engineers do well to study carefully the system which these ancient people no doubt found to be an efficient remedy for devastating floods?—Memphis Avalanche.

THE local editor of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, Mr. J. H. Mabbitt, says: "We have used St. Jacobs Oil in our family for rheumatism, and found it to be a first-class thing."—Boston Herald.

"SHALL I go West?" is the heading of an article in a leading Eastern journal. The answer is clear. Certainly, if you have the "sand"—that is, the brain and muscle and skill. The West is not in need of drones. It is no place to live easy. A man not willing to roll up his sleeves and sweat had better not come West. Everybody sweats out West; they don't simply "perspire."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A MYSTERY explained: "Lawrence, my dear," said his wife, wreathed in smiles, "I wish you had been to church this morning. Mr. Jones was very interesting, and when he prayed for the absent ones—" "Well, that accounts for it, then. I haven't caught such a string of fish for a year as I did this morning."—Detroit Free Press.

"Threw Away Her Supporter."

DR. PIERCE:—A neighbor of ours was suffering with "female weakness," which the doctors told her could not be cured without a supporter. After considerable persuasion my wife induced her to try your "Favorite Prescription." After using one bottle she threw away the supporter and did a large washing, which she had not done in two years before.

What a Three-Cent Stamp Will Do.

It will do more than any other piece of paper of its size and value in the world. It accomplishes what would, a few years ago, have been deemed impossible. That talismanic placard on the corner of an envelope or package commands the use of capacious and beautiful buildings wherein to receive your letters, orders trains of cars to carry them, and starts an army of men to deliver them. It brings information from every section of the country and tidings of pleasure as well. But the crowning consideration is the fact that a three-cent stamp sent to A. VOGELER & Co., Baltimore, Md., with the applicant's name and address, will procure a copy of ST. JACOBS Calendar, replete with interesting reading matter, and, better than all, containing specific instructions for the treatment and cure of rheumatism, neuralgia and all painful diseases by the use of ST.

JACOBS OIL. Concerning the efficacy of this wonderful substance, the following must impress the reader:—Hon. Thomas L. James, Postmaster-General of the United States, when Postmaster of the City of New York, concurred in the following testimonial from Wm. H. Wareing, Esq., Asst. General Superintendent Third Division Mailing and Distributing Department, New York Post-office: "I take pleasure in advising that the samples of ST. JACOBS OIL left for distribution among the clerks of this office, have, as far as they have been tried, proved equal to all that is claimed for the OIL. The reports from the several superintendents and clerks who have used the OIL agree in praising it highly. It has been found efficacious in cuts, burns, soreness and stiffness of the joints and muscles, and affords a ready relief for rheumatic complaints." Col. Samuel H. Taylor, Washington, Ind., and ex-Postmaster of Cumberland, Md., was cured of rheumatism by ST. JACOBS OIL.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of Iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and invaluable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a combination as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAM... 3194 Wa...

OUR MILLY.

Way down upon de Suwanee ribber,
Far, far away;
Dar's whar my heart am turnin' eber,
Dar's whar de ole folks stay.

Clear as a bird song the voice floated througa the open, vine-shaded window, where sat Edith Morgan and her unt, Mrs. Hayward, who had just come om Massachusetts to visit at this comrtable Western home.

"Why, Edith!" exclaimed the elder the two ladies, "have you a little nero here? I thought old Hannah was as all you took West."

Edith flushed slightly, but smiled, ying: "No, auntie; your critical ears eceived you this time. That was Our illy."

"Indeed! A voice like that in a white hild is worthy of cultivation. Does e sing any other songs with equal paos?"

"I must confess, auntie," replied dith, "that her music is mostly conned to negro melodies, which she has arned from Hannah, but she sings hem all with great fervor. Really, ntie, I hardly know what to do with illy. I have hoped your coming might elp me out of the quandary. Since amma's death she has been under no ontrol at all. Papa thinks whatever e does is just right, and so, of course, ermits her to follow her own inclinaons."

Here the conversation was interrupted y the entrance of Milly herself. She d not look at all like a "Tom boy," r she was a sweet-faced, demure little aiden.

"Milly," said her sister, "Aunt Hayard thought you were a little darky hen she heard you sing." An irresistie smile broke over the pretty face, and e red lips parted, revealing two rows pearly teeth. She held out two little nburned hands, saying: "Not quite bad as that, auntie, though I am nned 'most black enough, Edith says, d my head is most woolly enough." nd she shook back her tangled curls.

"How would you like to go back to oston with me and take lessons in singg?" asked Mrs. Hayward. Milly ened her eyes with wide astonishent.

"Why, auntie, I don't need to learn sing. I always knew how. I thought ou heard me."

"You see how she is," said Edith. When she makes up her mind to anyhing there is no changing her. She ever storms or acts naughty, like other hildren, but she will say, with the air a sage: 'No, Edith, I must! I ought !' and there she will stay. Papa says he is made of the same metal as heroes nd martyrs, and I don't know but he is ight."

Mrs. Hayward remained in her brothr's home from early June until August, nd every day Milly grew more and more nto her heart, till the childless woman elt that she must have the little Westrn flower to brighten her city home. But Milly was firm in her refusal.

"I cannot leave papa!" she would ay. "He has the first claim on me."

One day in the summer she had gone ome distance from home to pick berries, when there arose one of those terible storms so common in some parts of the West; lightning and rain, accompanied by a furious wind. While the amily were in great distress over Milly's absence, she came galloping home on a pet cow. When questioned, she answered:

"I heard Brindle's bell just before he storm came on, and I knew the cows were all going down to the fork to drink, and their path leads right through the berry path. So I waited a minute or two, till they came filing along, and then jumped right on Brindle's back. I knew by the clouds that we were going to have a blow, and I thought she was so big the wind couldn't carry her off, and I meant to hug her tight and lie low, so I wouldn't blow away. And you see I succeeded. My berries are all right, though," she added, gayly. "I hid them in an old hollow cottonwood tree, and I'll go and get them after the storm is over."

"Were you not frightened?" asked Edith, as she helped Milly change the drenched clothing.

"Yes, Edie, I was," she answered, soberly, "and I prayed a little prayer; but I didn't forget to cling tight."

At length the time came for the Boston aunt to go home. It was arranged that Edith should accompany her father, as he drove with his sister the thirty miles to the city, where she was to take the eastern-bound train. They were to remain a day in town for the purpose of shopping, returning on the third. As Mr. Morgan kissed his pet daughter goodby he said playfully: "Now, Pussy, you must take good care of things while papa is gone."

"I will, papa," was the earnest reply.

"I dislike to go away," continued her father. "Everything is very dry and there have been fires west of us; but Patrick and Hannah are faithful and you are worth a half dozen any day."

"Don't worry, papa, dear," said Milly, gyaly. "Just go and have a good time. We shall be all right."

The morning of the third day was clear and pleasant. A breeze from the opposite direction during the night had blown away the smoke, and with it went the fear from the heart of the poor old black woman. Pat, too, was in good spirits, though, in his way, he had been as lugubrious as Hannah. So they all went to work with a good will. Pat was reshingling a barn; Hannah was baking; for she declared she must do "heaps of cookin'" before "Mars' Morgan and Miss Edith" should come; and Milly was acting as little maid of all work to the sable cook. She washed dishes, buttered pie plates and cake-tins, occasionally leaving her work to dart into the sitting room, to assure herself that everything was in order for the home-coming of her loved ones.

Gwine to ride up in de chariot
Sooner in de mornin'

she sang. But hark! What was that? A cry of terror or distress. She flew to the door, followed by Hannah. They saw Patrick crawling toward the house on his hands and knees.

"The prairie is on fire he shouted, adding, immediately: "Howly mother, be merciful! for it's helpless I am intirely."

The prairie was indeed on fire, though at some distance. Pat, from his perch on the barn, had spied it, and, in his haste to get down and give the alarm, had slipped on the ladder and fallen to the ground, severely spraining his ankle.

"You must burn a sthreak, Miss Milly, and just as quick as ever ye can, for the fire is a-comin' like an express thrain."

Milly understood—she had often heard of it—and already the matches and some bits of paper were in her hand.

"Where, Pat?" she called.

"Out forninst yon wire fence. I'll dhraw water, and Hannah must carry it till ye, to shprinkle the ground this side yer fire." And Patrick dragged himself painfully to the well.

Milly did as she was told and everything succeeded bravely. The fright had a wonderful effect on Hannah's rheumatic limbs, and she carried water on the double quick.

On came the great fire, nearer and nearer. Milly could hear the roaring and hissing of the flame, the trampling and snorting of horses, and the bellowing of cattle, as they raced for life.

At the right and left of her fire they passed, but the child scarcely noticed them. She dimly saw, through the smoke, several gaunt prairie wolves dash by; but it seemed perfectly natural and she had no thought of fear. She was saving her home.

With wet blankets she whipped back the fire, when it threatened to come where it should not. At last she had the satisfaction of seeing so wide a belt of burnt land between her home and the great fire that she felt sure they were safe, and she started to seek a refuge from the blinding smoke in the house her efforts had saved; but, borne on the wind, far up in mid-air, came sailing a blazing mass of straw, and, to Milly's horror, it fell on the house roof. With almost superhuman swiftness she ran toward the new scene of danger. Up the stairs she darted, catching, as she ran, a broom. From a dormer window she climbed out on the roof, and with a broom shoved the flaming straw to the ground, where it was quenched by Pat.

Hannah was by this time at the open window with water for Milly to pour on the now-blazing roof. She caught a pail and dashed the contents on the flame, unheeding that her own clothing was on fire; but Hannah saw, and, seizing a bed quilt, she climbed out of the window, almost as quickly as Milly herself had done, and wrapped it about her pet to smother the flame. Hannah had done her best, but before she reached her the calico dress was burned literally off, as was nearly all her clothing. The blaze was easily extinguished, but it had done its work.

With hearts clouded with terror and forebodings, Mr. Morgan and Edith drove toward home that afternoon over the blackened desert that had been so beautiful but two days before. The shadow lifted as they came in sight of the cozy farm-house, standing safe in an oasis of green.

"Thank God!" said Mr. Morgan, and Edith responded "amen!"

But when they reached home they found Sorrow enthroned awaiting them. Milly—wise, gentle, brave Milly—burned almost past recognition, lay upon the bed, her charred curls blackening the pillow. The father and sister saw it was too late for remedies. Milly was dying! She did not appear to suffer, but lay unconscious, though at intervals she murmured little snatches of the hymns she loved best. Suddenly she sang, and her voice was clear and strong as ever:

De chariot! de chariot! its wheels roll in fire.

A long silence followed, broken only by the labored breathings of the little martyr. Then she sang softly and slowly:

Swing low, sweet chariot, comin'—for to—carry—

The heart-broken watchers listened to catch the remaining words; but they never were sung, unless, it may be, the strain was finished in the upper home.

Unseen, the mystic chariot had swung low.—Independent.

THE GREAT PYRAMID.

Richard A. Proctor claims that the structure was both a tomb and an astronomical observatory. When we remember, he says, that the astronomy of the time of Cheops was essentially astrology, and astrology a most important part of religion, we begin to see how the erection of the mighty mass of masonry for astronomical purposes may be explained—or, rather, we see how, being certainly astronomical, it must be explained. Inasmuch as it is an astronomical building, erected in a time when astronomy was astrology, it was erected for astrological purposes. It was in this sense a sort of temple, erected, indeed, for the peculiar benefit of one man or of a single dynasty; but as he was a King in a time when being a King meant a great deal, what benefited him he doubtless regarded as a benefit also to his people; in whatever sense the Great Pyramid had a religious significance with regard to him, it had also a national religious significance.

There is no other theory of the Great Pyramid which comes near to giving a common-sense interpretation of the combined astronomical and sepulchral character of this wonderful structure. If it is certain on the one hand that the building was built astronomically, and was meant for astronomical observation, it is equally certain that it was meant for a tomb, that it was closed in very soon after the King died for whom it was built, that, in fine, its astronomical value related to himself alone. As an astrological edifice, a gigantic horoscope for him and him only, we can understand its purport, much though we may marvel at the vast expenditure of care, labor and treasure at which it was erected. Granted full faith in astrology (and we know there was such a faith), it was worth while to build such a structure as the Great Pyramid, just as, granted the ideas of the Egyptians about burial, we can understand the erection of so mighty a mass, and all save its special astronomical character. Of no other theory than that which combines these two strange but most marked characteristics of the Egyptian mind can this be said.

AN AUTHOR'S LUCK.

When Auerbach, the German novelist, was a young man he was persuaded to try his luck in a lottery. He dreamed that 17,586 was the lucky number. He discovered that this had been in the possession of a rich family, who had played with it for sixty years, and who, although it had drawn nothing, would not part with it. The agent offered him 17,585 and 17,587, which, in spite of a warning that a refusal of tickets under such circumstances was unlucky, Auerbach refused, and from a package of tickets drew No. 1. No. 1 was nothing; but 17,585 came out with the capital prize of 150,000 Prussian dollars. Auerbach never afterward permitted himself to be tempted.

CROWNED HEADS.

The Sad Fate of Many Kingly Rulers.

[From the Cincinnati Saturday Night.]

Did you ever stop, gentle reader, in your evenly-balanced and unchecked career as a peaceful freeman of our glorious Union, to consider how fortunate it is for you that you were not alive 500 or 1,000 years ago? Because if you had been living then you might, and in all probability would, have been King or Queen of England, in which case your wretched existence and miserable death would have been assured.

There was King Edmund, who, while feasting with all his nobles about him, was attacked by a noted robber of the day and stabbed to the heart. Without pausing to inquire what the nobles were about to permit this murder, we will proceed to King Edred. Edred was hounded into dissoluteness by a favorite, St. Dunstan, an ambitious priest, who was permitted to run the governmental machine pretty much as he pleased. Edwy, the successor of Edred, inherited the partisanship of Brother St. Dunstan, but, choosing to marry against St. Dunstan's will, he incurred the violent displeasure of the man of God, who through the instrumentality of Odo, then Archbishop of Canterbury, caused the Queen's face to be burned with hot irons, and then carried her away to Ireland, and finally killed her, the shock breaking poor King Edwy's heart.

The next King, Edgar, reigned for seventeen years, and, strange to say, had no trouble at all, and finally died an ordinary, every-day sort of death, at his residence, No. so and so, such a street, Edgar, King of England, age 37 years, 11 months and 18 days. Friends of the family invited to attend. The next to assume the crown was Edward, who, a very short time thereafter, was stabbed in the back by a hireling of his mother, Elfrida, whose own son, Ethelred, then succeeded to the throne. King Edmund was murdered by one of his nobles; King Harold died from the effects of a shot in the eye; William of Normandy got a bruise that led to a wretched death; William II. was shot with an arrow and killed; and so it went, the good Kings and Queens being killed by the bad people, while the bad sovereigns were put out of the way by the good people.

MONO LAKE, CALIFORNIA.

The density of the water is remarkable, being just the reverse of that of Lake Tahoe, in which the body of a drowned person never returns to the surface. A paper says that for bitterness and promiscuous meanness the waters of Lake Mono surpass those of the Dead Sea. They contain so much alkali that on a windy day the lake is a regular tub of soapsuds. The writer has seen a wall of lather five feet high along the whole of that shore against which the waves were beating. Occasionally the wind would take up a bunch of lather as big as a bushel basket and carry it several hundred feet inland. So buoyant are the waters of the lake that quite a party of men may navigate them on a raft made of four or five dry cottonwood poles. Out in the lake are islands of rock (lava-like concretions), through which streams of water boil up. The water of these springs is like that of the lake, but in one place is a large spring of fresh water. This is near the northwest corner of the lake, and at a point where there is a depth of eight or ten feet of water. It is a sort of fountain. A column of fresh water, some three feet in diameter, is projected upward with such force that it raises to the height of at least two feet above the level of the lake in the form of a mound or knoll, and makes a rippling noise that can be heard a considerable distance. But for the fact that this fountain has a depth of eight or ten feet to contend against, it would probably rise to a considerable height in the air.

AN APT RETORT.

W. W. O'Brien, a well-known Chicago attorney, while cross-examining a witness, who had testified that he was a cabinet-maker, asked: "Are you a physician?"

"No; and I never claimed to be," was the reply.

"Oh, well," said the attorney, "I have seen a great many fools who were physicians and a great many who were not."

"And I have seen a great many lawyers who were gentlemen and a great many who were not," retorted the witness.

The five Northwestern States which raise a surplus of corn are the granary of the world. And in the near future they are destined to be the richest part of the earth.

IRELAND, 1847.

ONE OF THE LATE DENIS FLORENCE M'CARTHY'S PATRIOTIC POEMS.

God of justice! God of power!
Do we dream? Can it be,
In this land, in this hour,
With the blossom on the tree,
In the gladsome month of May,
When the young lambs play,
When the nature looks around
On her waking children now,
The seed within the ground,
The bud upon the bough?
Is it right, is it fair,
That we perish of despair
In this land, on this soil
Where our destiny is set,
Which we cultured with our toil
And watered with our sweat?

We have plowed, we have sown,
But the crop was not our own;
We have reaped, but harpy hands
Swept the harvest from our lands
We were perishing for food,
When lo! in pitying mood
Our kindly rulers gave
The fat fluid of the slave,
While our corn filled the manger
Of the war-horse of the stranger.

God of mercy! must this last?
Is this land preordained,
For the present, and the past,
And the future, to be chained—
To be ravaged, to be drained,
To be robbed, to be spoiled,
To be hushed, to be whipt,
Its soaring pinions clipt,
And its every effort foiled?

Do our numbers multiply
But to perish and to die?
Is this all our destiny below—
That our bodies as they rot
May fertilize the spot
Where the harvests of the strangers grow?

If this be indeed our fate,
Far, far better now, though late,
That we seek some other land and try some other zone;
The coldest, bleakest shore
Will surely yield us more
Than the storehouse of the stranger that we dare not call our own.

A CURIOUS BUSINESS.

One of the most singular of all avocations is described by an English journal in a way to indicate that it has an established existence in London. It is nothing more nor less than the bringing off of prize-fights, and the business gives employment to a number of middlemen. The middleman has his regular beat and calls on regular customers. He also has his pairs of gladiators always at call. Supposing that a set of men wish to see a genuine combat, they simply subscribe £20 or £30 or £50, and place the money in the middleman's hands. A £20 "mill" is not a very sanguinary affair, but £50 will buy a good deal of bloodshed. When the money is deposited the agent picks out "two lads that want to have a turn." The "lads" are mostly lazy louts who do not love work. They train for a week on money supplied by the honest merchant who arranges the meeting. When they are finally placed in the ring they really do hurt each other a good deal, and the spectators have the pleasure of battle and conspiracy simultaneously. There are half an hour of heavy hitting, a few spirited rallies on the cords, a large amount of bad language, and then one man gives in. The middleman pockets half the money, and the rest is divided between the battered ruffians who afforded the entertainment.

HOW HE BECAME SATISFIED.

A great many boys mistake their calling, but all such are not fortunate enough to find it out in as good season as did this one.

It is said that Rufus Choate, the great lawyer, was once in New Hampshire, making a plea, when a boy, the son of a farmer, resolved to leave the plow and become a lawyer like Rufus Choate. He accordingly went to Boston, called upon Mr. Choate, and said to him: "I heard you plead in our town, and I have a great desire to become a lawyer like you. Will you teach me how?"

"As well as I can," said the lawyer. "Come, sit down." Taking down a copy of Blackstone he said: "Read till I come back, and I will see how you get on."

The poor boy began. An hour passed, his back ached, his head ached and his legs ached. Every moment became a torture. He wanted air. Another hour passed, and Mr. Choate came in and asked:

"How did you get on?"

"Get on? Why, do you have to read such stuff as this?"

"Yes."

"How much of it?"

"All there is on these shelves, and more," looking about the great library.

"How long will it take?"

"Well, it has taken me more than twenty-five years."

"How much do you get?"

"My board and clothes."

"Is that all?"

"Well, that is about all that I have gained as yet."

Say but little, think much, and do more.

Trained pugs now sit at milady's window with a bow of bright-colored ribbon at their necks, and it is easy to see that they regard themselves as a very superior kind of dog. While you gaze at the petted beast you have also a chance to admire the fine design of milady's lace curtains, which, as a matter of course, originally belonged to the Empress Eugenie, and "were picked up while we were in Europe last summer."

The Republican convention met in Montgomery, on the 6th and endorsed the Greenback ticket put out in Birmingham, on the day previous, which is published elsewhere in these columns. This was expected, and was a surprise to none. The Independent Greenback Republicans are "a queer set" of soreheads, and if they manage to pull through the campaign, they will find themselves much the worse for wear at its close.

The Shelby county Radicals seem to be in a desperate strait for an issue. They say that the Democrats have "ignored the only vital issue before the people, by treating with silence the great temperance movement." Shelby is one of the strongest prohibition counties in the State, and a Democratic representative helped to make her so, and if the great disaffected can't find a stronger plank to stand on, it would be well for them to crawl off at once and give up the ghost, as they will be compelled to do so, nolens volens, after the August election.

A lively fight-the-devil-with-fire spat occured in the national House of Representatives, on the 6th between ex-Secretary Robeson, and Representative Whitthorne, of Tennessee. Mr. Whitthorne is Chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the charges of fraud against Robeson, while he was Secretary of the Navy. In the course of his remarks he took occasion to allude the ex-Secretary to as a "liar and perjurer." Robeson after some beating-around-the-bush resumed his seat saying that he would rest on the record.

A crowd of Greenbackers, Independents and Radicals met in Birmingham, on the 5th, and nominated the followimg as a State ticket: For Governor, James L. Sheffield, of Marshall; for Secretary of State A. H. Townsend, of Butler; for Attorney-General, Paul Jones, of Madison; for Treasurer Jno. W. Montgomery, of Jefferson; for Auditor, John B. Shields, of Walker; for Superintendent of Education, Dr. Ira G. Wood, of Jackson. The Iron Age characterizes the ticket as the same old Independent-Radical coon with a few new stripes around its tail.

Egypt in Trouble.

Egypt seems to be on the verge of a resort to arms, in refusing to accede to the demands of Great Britain. On the 10th inst., English Admiral Seymour demanded the temporary surrender of the forts at Alexandria, for the purpose of disarmament under threats of bombardment in twenty-four hours; and a later telegram states as the Governor of Alexandria had not made such surrender, the bombardment of the city was commenced on the 11th inst. The secret of the difficulty is that England is controling the Suez canal to the detriment of Egyptian interests. We publish the following telegrams to give a better idea of the situation:

ALEXANDRIA, July 9.—This evening, from a steamship lying in the harbor, soldiers are distinctly seen digging trenches and carrying shot from one fort to another. English controller general, and the staff of the English consulate will go on board the ship to-night.

Midnight.—All members of the Consulates are now aboard of the vessel in the harbor. The English consul has sent word to other consuls, advising them to notify their countrymen to quit Alexandria, within twenty-four hours.

ALEXANDRIA, July 10.—The notice of bombardment of Alexandria was given this morning by a letter addressed to the Governor by Admiral Seymour.

The twenty-four hours notice expires at four o'clock to-morrow morning, when the bombardment will commence.

Admiral Seymour yesterday summoned his captains on board the flag ship and settled the details of the bombardment. The French fleet will not participate in the bombardment.

It is believed that the Governor of Alexandria has proposed a compromise, but Admiral Seymour will not accept any terms short of the complete surrender of the forts.

The British ships are cleared for action. The Thetis, Monarch, and Invincible are lying in the harbor. The rest of the ships are outside.

Foreign Consuls, excepting the British, have protested against the bombardment.

LONDON, July 10.—A dispatch from Alexandria to the Daily Telegraph says: American Admiral Nicholson warned the Arabs working on the forts that if they fire on him he will return the fire.

In the House of Lords this afternoon, Lord Granville confirmed the news that unless Alexandria forts temporarily surrendered, Admiral Seymour would bombard them at daybreak to-morrow. It was painful, he said, to be obliged to use force against weak but hostile preparations, which had been proceeding in defiance of orders both of the Khedive and Sultan. The action now taken was in self-defence.

LONDON, July 11.—The correspondent of Reuter's Telegraph Company, on board the Bittern telegraphs the following:

ALEXANDRIA, July 11.—The bombardment has commenced.

BOSTON, July 8.—The effect of the Egyptian muddle is distinctly felt in the markets for East India merchandise. The fear that the Suez canal may be damaged has imparted a firmer feeling in shellac, cutch, etc. White gum arabic, which is an Egyptian product, has advanced from 6 to 8 cents per pound.

ALEXANDRIA, July 11, 6 p. m.—The action is finished for the day. The casualties on the English side amount to forty wounded and nine killed. Shortly after noon all exposed guns on the forts were dismounted and only those in sheltered positions were able to return the British fire. Fort Marsa el Kanat which was blown up was only completed a week ago, Sunday last. The Moncrieffe battery and Pharas fort have been silenced by the guns of the Temeraire and Inflexible. The report that forty British were wounded is confirmed. The Egyptain loss is at present unknown but will likely be severe. A part of the Ras el Ten Palace is in ruins and the light house is slightly damaged. Admiral Seymour recommends the attack on Fort Gulaii and the harbor forts in the morning. The small effect of the 81 ton and other heavy guns on the earth works caused some disappointment in the fleet. The Invincible had four men wounded. Inflexible was hit 5 times.

The London Times on Guiteau.

London, July 1.—The Times commenting on the execution of Guiteau, considers his behavior, until the last shred of hope had disappeared, consistent. It says: "He was not so overcome at the prospect of certain death as to forget his theatrical airs. He was not ashamed to declare he died a Christian and patriot. Guiteau's place is in the dark calender by the side of Felton, and Ravaillac."

The Gadsden Times says: Speaking of the Matrimonial Associations, there is one man in Gadsden—a widower—that holds sixty-eight certificates, which, if held to maturity, would amount to $204,000, and if he should marry in six months, at an average of 600 on each certificate, he will get $40,800. There are several other persons here who have from five to twenty marriage certificates.

A postal card to this office enquires "how much does our 'large interest' in South Alabama weigh?" And the Selma Times queries: "How long, brother, will it be before we can give you a column notice on your 'stepping off?'" Eighty-seven pounds—Shortly.

The above from the Eufaula Times man is evidence that he is soon to become a benedict.

Postmaster Moseley was President of the Talladega Republican County Convention and Deputy Internal Revenue Collector Shouse, Secretary. The discussions culminated in a storm. Some were opposed to running the machine on the color line, and in favor of giving aid and comfort to office-seeking Democratic soreheads. Others opposed Independents and wanted to fight on a straight line. There was a decided split on the question of nominations for the Legislature and none were made.

Greenville Advocate: Quite a brisk business was done in the city last Saturday, and things looked lively in our advancing houses. 'Tis true 'tis pity that most of this business was "on a credit," and very few silver shekels passed across the counter from customer to clerk. How long will this credit business continue its bad and sad, its baneful and baleful sway over our farming interests—and our mercantile interests as well? How long before we shall be delivered from the body of this death? How long before the agricultural interests of our country shall flourish and prosper as they ought to do in a land which has been so lavishly favored by the bountiful hand of Nature? Ah, well, we shall see what we shall see. They say there is a "good time coming" for this country. The better elements grant that it may come and come quickly!

Maplesville Dots.

Dry weather with promises of rain.

The "Glorious Fourth" was celebrated by our citizens to a small extent, some had a fishing party, three miles above here, while others had a small picnic at Mulberry church.

We would earnestly ask the attention of the proper authorities to the condition of the road north from old Maplesville. It can hardly be considered passable for an empty farm wagon.

A mad dog strayed over the country east of here last Saturday, and attacked everything in his course. A son of Mr. Tom Housley was bitten by him. At last accounts the boy was improving.

We will have a barbecue, the 15th inst., at the old Herod field about ten miles southeast of here.

The article headed "Farmers' Boys," in last week's paper, deserves the attention of all. The author is one of the rising young men of this county, who has had very limited educational advantages himself and knows how it is. Our county is proud of such young men. BIJOU.

Guitean's Brain.

Special to the Cincinnati Gazette: The doctors who have been trying to determine the question of Guiteau's sanity by inspecting his brain are on the point of declaring war among themselves. There is as much difference of opinion upon the significance of the brain indications as there was before over the judgments formed from Guiteau's actions. Two of the doctors have withdrawn from the examination in an exceedingly ruffled state of mind Those who still remain are divided in opinion. It is doubtful whether this question can be settled by the means now employed unless three or four examining doctors on a side are cut up in turn and their brains examined, to see which side has the keenest perception and is the most likely to be right. The general public would be very much delighted and greatly relieved to have this last test made on a liberal scale as to numbers.

County Teachers' Institute.

CLANTON, ALA., July 7, '82.

MORNING SESSION.

The Teachers' Institute of Chilton County was called to order by the President. The Constitution and By-Laws were read and adopted. The Secretary was requested to make a list of the members present, which he did. The following were elected and enrolled as honorary members: W. M. Wilson, Mrs. A. M. Knox, Dr. W. E. Stewart, J. S. Edwards, W. E. Johnson, Dr. Duke, Miss Mollie Hannon, Mrs. Sexton, Mrs. Barnes, A. F. Lewis, Rev. J. T. Roper, and Miss Rosa Thornton.

While waiting for an audience to collect, the members present engaged in a miscellaneous talk as to what part of speech "worth" was, in the sentence, "The book is worth a dollar." Montgomery parsed it as an adjective. Haralson regarded the sentence as eliptical and parsed "worth" as a substantive and governed by the preposition of, understood. After discussing other similar questions, the meeting adjourned until eight o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The meeting was called to order by the President. Prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Shores.

An essay was then read by J. R. McArthur on the "Co-operation of Parents and Teachers in the Education of Children." Discussed by W. A. Montgomery. Strong arguments were adduced in support of co-operation.

The next essay, on the "Relation of Teacher and Pupil," was read by W. H. Lawrence. Mr. L. thought the relation should be one of friendship and mutual confidence. Discussed by A. L. Haralson, Mr. H. assenting that the teacher stood "in loco parentis."

The next essay on "Reading," was read by Mrs. Brinkman. This subject was well considered by the essayist, and gave great satisfaction. Discussed by J. W. Shores, who thought good reading of prime importance in education. W. A. Montgomery stated that if he had a hobby, it was "Reading," but the lateness of the hour prevented furdiscussion.

The Convention adjourned to meet at nine o'clock to-morrow.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Convention called to order by the President. Prayer was offered by the Rev. Mr Roper, in which aid was invoked from heaven in the diffusion of knowledge throughout Chilton county.

The subject was then discussed, "Shall Coporal Punishment be Inflicted in our Schools." Messrs. Shores, Montgomery, Edwards and Haralson expressed opinions. Mr. M. thought it ought to be inflicted only as a last resort. Mr. S. favored corporal punishment inflicted in moderation and affection. Mr. E. opposed it. Mr. H. thought that until children were properly governed at home, it would be necessary.

The subject, "Are written rules best for the school room" was then discussed by W. A. Montgomery and J. S. Edwards. Mr. M. was in favor of only a few prominent rules. Mr. E. advocated written rules.

J. S. Edwards delivered an address on the "School Law of Alabama." He pointed out its defects, and advanced the startling opinion that according to the law a teacher in our public schools had no right to inflict corporal punishment.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention called to order. Prayer by Rev. Montgomery. A proposition was made to amend the constitution so as to make all the township superintendents, members of the Teachers' Institute. It was so amended.

An address was delivered by Rev. J. W. Shores, on "Education, Who should Foster and give it Support." His remarks were forcible and well received by the audience.

An adress on "Geography," was read by A. L. Haralson, and the adaptability of Tunison's Matchless Railroad, County and Distance Map, to the school room, pointed out.

The address of Rev. Mr. Montgomery was postponed until the next meeting of the Institute, that more of the teachers, for whom it was especially designed, might be present at its delivery.

The Institute, after a benediction by Rev. Mr. Roper, adjourned to meet at the time and place that may hereafter be designated.

A. L. HARALSON, Sec'y.

On Wednesday the Central Congressional Committee met in Clanton, and selected the following as delegates to the District Congressional Convention, which will meet at Dadeville, August 30th: Beat 1—William Marcus; beat 2—John B. Randall; beat 3—William Walker; beat 4—W. A. Collier; beat 5—A. J. Brooks; beat 6—J. L. Farr; beat 7—Minor Wooley; beat 8—T. E. Callier. We will publish the report of the committee next week.

HOW TO SLEEP WELL.

No healthful sleep comes except that which follows voluntary or involuntary action of the body. Pedestrians fall into sound, deep sleep as soon as put to bed, at the appointed time for rest. This is the sleep from voluntary muscular exercise. A person in good health sits around the house all day; an invalid may all day sit and lounge and lie down from morning until night without sleeping; and both the healthy man and the invalid, in the course of the evening, will become sleepy and fall into sound repose, the result of the weariness which involuntary action brings about; for the various organs of the body, the heart, the liver, the stomach, the eyelids, work steadily every day. The intestines are as ceaseless in their motion as the waves of the ocean; as these latter are always dashing toward the shore, so is the great visceral machinery working, working, working, pushing the wastes of the body downward and outward from the first breath of existence to the last gasp of life. There is not a movement of the system, voluntary or involuntary, external or internal, which does not require power to cause it. When that power is to a certain extent exhausted, instinct brings on the sensation of sleepiness, which is the result of exhausted power, intended by nature to secure that cessation from activity which gives time for recuperation, very much as a man who runs for a while stops and rests, so as to get stronger to run again. We get up in the morning with a certain amount of reserved or accumulated strength; in the course of the day that strength becomes expended to the point necessary for the commencement of a new supply, which comes from rest, the rest from sleep. Opium narcotics, all forms of anodynes, cause sleep artificially, compelling rest. A horse may be tired so that he cannot move; he is compelled to be at rest; it is not the rest of tiredness, hence it is unnatural. Anodynes, in a sense, tie a man down; they take away his power of motion, they compel a rest, but it is not the rest which is the result of used-up strength, hence it is an artificial rest causing an artificial sleep, not natural; and sleep which is unnatural cannot be healthful; hence the truth of the first utterances of this chapter—healthful sleep comes from the expenditure of the strength of the body in various forms of exercise.—Hall's Journal of Health.

ANOTHER ARKANSAS AFFAIR.

Old bow-legged Jake, a colored man of high standing and extreme blackness, entered the County Clerk's office and said:

"Boss, I wants a par ob marriage license. I'se a ole man, but I'se gwine ter marry one ob de youngest gals in dis community."

"Have the parents of the girl any objections to the marriage?" asked the Clerk, hesitating as to whether or not the license should be issued.

"Hit doan' seem so ter me," replied Jake.

"Did you ask the old man's consent?"

"No, sah."

"How do you know, then, that he does not object?"

"Well, yer see I has been a callin' on de young lady for some time, an' las' night de ole man come in, tuck down a army gun an' said dat he reckoned me an' Liddy aughter git married. Dis mornin' he comes ober ter my house wid de gun an' said suthin' about my goin' at once an' gettin' de liscense. I tole him dat I had a wife somewhar in de country, but he cocked de ole gun an' looked so sad like, dat I struck a trot fur dis office."

"If you have a living wife, old man, I can't issue a license."

"But, boss, dis is one ob dese he'ar stringent cases. De fodder of de gal is standin' out at the corner ob de house wid that army gun. It's better, boss, for a man to hab two libin' wives den it is fur a 'oman ter hab one dead husband."

Finally the old man with the gun was induced to come into the office and explain. "Well, yer see, boss," he said, "ole Jake hab been burnin' my oil an' wearin' out de bottoms of my chairs long enough. He's been eatin' at my house mor'n a year, courtin' my gal, an' now I want's him to board de gal awhile. Ef he don't I'll hab to injur him." After a while, however, the old man agreed that if Jake would pay him $5 the affair would be settled without marriage. The money was paid over, and the two men contemplate establishing a catfish restaurant.—Arkansas Gazette.

THE ROBIN.

The robbin has a red breast. They have a plaintiff song and sing as though they were sorry for sumthing. They get their name from their great ability for robbin' a cherry tree. They kan also rob a currant bush fust rate. If it was not for these robbers we shud all be eaten up by caterpillars; but I think the robins might let us have now and then just one of our own cherris, tew see how they did taste. The hat. They fly very much unsartin, and ackt as though they had taken a leetle too much gin. What they are good for I kan't tell, and I don't believe they can tell neither.—Josh Billings.

CURIOUS PATENTS.

Products of Our Yankee Invention.

Some investigating person has furnished the New York Times with a brief list of patents on small things—such as any man or boy might have thought of, but didn't, and which in many instances have proved mines of wealth to the lucky discoverer.

Among these trifles is the favorite toy—the "return ball"—a wooden ball with an elastic string attached, selling for the sum of 10 cents each, but yielding to its patentee an income equal to fair returns on a capital of $500,000. The rubber tip on the end of lead pencils affords the owner of the royalty an independent fortune. The inventor of the gummed newspaper wrapper is also a rich man. The gimlet-pointed screw has evolved more wealth than most silver mines, and the man who first thought of putting copper tips to children's shoes is as well off as if his father had left him $2,000,000 in United States bonds. Although roller-skates are not so much used in countries where ice is abundant, in South America, especially in Brazil, they are very highly esteemed and have yielded over $1,000,000 to their inventor. But he had to spend $125,000 in England alone fighting infringements. The "dancing Jim Crow," a toy, provides an annual income of $30,000 to its inventor, and the common needle threader is worth $10,000 a year to the man who thought of it. The "drive well" was an idea of Col. Green, whose troops, during the war, were in want of water. He conceived the notion of driving a two-inch tube into the ground until water was reached and then attaching a pump. This simple contrivance was patented after the war, and the tens of thousands of farmers who have adopted it have been obliged to pay him a royalty, a moderate estimate of which is placed at $2,000,000. The spring window shade yields an income equal to an investment of $1,000,000; the stylographic pen, with which this article is written, also $1,000,000; the marking pen for shading in different colors, $100,000; rubber stamps, the same. A large fortune has been reaped by a Western miner who, ten years since, invented a metal rivet or eyelet at each end of the mouth of breeches and coat pockets to resist the strain caused by the carriage of pieces of ore and heavy tools. Fortunes have been made out of the dead as well as the living. The torpedo grave, which will explode when body-snatchers meddle with it, is one bonanza; another odd, but probably not lucrative one, is an open tube, running from the top of the ground to the coffin-lid, just over the face of the corpse. If the person is in a trance and has been buried alive, he draws himself up through the hole and returns to the surface by means of a rope-ladder in the tube. If he prefers, however, to send for assistance, he pulls a cord which rings a bell near the top of the tube. After lying there long enough to assure his friends that he has no intention of coming back the tube is pulled up, drawing as it comes a glass plate over the face of the inmate of the coffin.

Every time a woman pricks the shell of an egg preparatory to boiling it she violates a patent right, this having been secured by some genius who discovered that it would prevent their breaking during the boiling. It having been said that chickens hatched by artificial heat do not thrive as well as others because they miss the maternal affection expressed in the "cluck, cluck" of the natural hen, an inventor has taken out a patent which imitates that sound, soothing and charming the tender-hearted but-bereaved offspring with its artificial croon and consoling the young orphan with its mechanical solicitude. This is based evidently upon another patent for babies of a machine operated by clock-work and producing a low and melancholy murmur which no child, however wakeful, can successfully resist, but to which it succumbs in profound slumber. There is also the false-bottomed nest which deludes the hen into the belief that she has not laid an egg, and, combined with her own conscientious devotion to duty, persuades her to continuance of her work until she is exhausted or undeceived. A patent hen roost, by the action of the hens, closes the doors of a bee-hive at night and opens them in the morning, protecting the hive against the ravages of the bee-moth. A wire frame strung above a horse's head is also patented. It is meant to persuade the animal that it is the top of a fence too high for him to overleap. This, of course, presumes that the horse is an ass.

A GREAT many of the old fish stories are not true. Here is a new one: A hollow log drawn from a Michigan river, "on being sawed through the center, revealed fourteen black bass and one bullhead, which flopped out of their hiding place. The fish were so large as to lead to the belief that they found their way into the log through a small hole, and afterward grew so much that they could not get out."—Picayune.

THEODORE PARKER once said he regarded it as far more favorable to the prosperity of a country, the erection of a sawmill than the arrival of a painter and a p[illegible]

THE HEART OF THE WORLD.

A Spot in London Which Is the Center o the Globe's Traffic.

[London Cor. New York Times.]

There are some sights of London, "real live sights" at that, which, though they escape the attention of the gentry, can not fail to impress an observer of ordinary keenness and intelligence. And among the most important of these objects of interest are certainly to be classed the Mansion House, the Royal Exchange, the Bank of England, and their surroundings. They are all in the heart of what is known as "the City." London, it must be remembered, is divided, for the purposes of government, into what may be called London proper, with twenty-six wards and a number of "liberties" and the "out parishes," the city of Westminster, and the seven Parliamentary boroughs of Chelsea, the Tower hamlets, Marylebone, Lambeth, Finsbury, Hackney and Southwark. Each of the boroughs is represented by two members in the House of Commons. Westminster is also entitled to two and the city of London to four. But this is a digression. As has been said, the Mansion House, the Royal Exchange and the Bank of England, three of the most noteworthy buildings in the world, are situated in what is known as "the City," and surrounded by the richest and most extensive banking-houses, commercial firms and insurance offices in the kingdom.

It has been said, perhaps not inaptly, that the site immediately in front of the Exchange upon which stands the famous statue of Wellington is the heart of the world. It certainly is so to the extent of being the heart of London. No other square of the size in the world can boast of such traffic. From it radiate no less than eight of the most important thoroughfares in great London. King William street, Lombard street, Threadneedle street, Cornhill, Wallbrook, Cannon street, Princes street and Cheapside, all through the day and night, empty living streams into it. From daybreak until long after dark great crowds are ever coming and going. But few women are seen. This is almost exclusively a man's region—a region to make money in—and to lose it. There goes, puffing, a fat man, fat and short, with a white waistcoat, a sallow, tallowy sort of face, and a long hooked nose, which plainly reveals his Jewish origin. That man's name is known to every banker in the world. At the bottom of a check it is good for millions, not of dollars, but of English pounds; yet he hurries along with far more trouble and anxiety stamped upon his face than is ever likely to be experienced by that swaggering young officer who strolls carelessly into Lombard street to negotiate a loan of a few hundreds. There near him, walking as though his life depended upon the pace, comes a familiar figure in this quarter—a stockbroker. He does not dress so well as do his brethren in New York, but he has the same keen, restless eyes. He wears a flower in the buttonhole of his close-fitting cut-away coat. Types, almost identical, of the same figure, and every one decorated with a buttonhole flower, are all about. Bank messengers in uniform and with black bags move here and there in the throng; tall policemen—they are numerous here—watch them protectingly, and they carry their treasure safely; occasionally a dashing fellow, a pick-pocket, or a sullen-looking knave, a sneak-thief, slinks out of sight of these same policemen; but not so the venders of obscene literature. They are bold fellows in "the City," and apparently on the best of terms with the authorities. To be sure, they keep their books with flaring covers out of sight under their coats most of the time, but when they see a possible customer, a sailor, a "flush"-looking clerk or a countryman, they do not scruple to display their pictures of women altogether too Eve-like in the matter of costume, or to loudly proclaim the merits of "the wery latest new novel. The racy adventures of a clergyman's daughter in Londing." On the sidewalks or out in the roadway, it is all one to them. Under the heads of the horses, rivaling the boys, who all day long sweep the street filth into dust-pans, these young rascals ply their trade. How they escape death and mangling from the ever-whizzing wheels of the carriages and cabs and hansoms, whose occupants they hope to make buyers of their books, is a mystery to a stranger. And even greater seems the wonder that these same vehicles, with drays, and carts and omnibuses, and piemen's and hucksters' wagons beside, do not become hopelessly "blocked," mixed, interlocked, broken out of all use and shape in that small square to which run so many streets. But they never do become "blocked," and, though some of the cabs and hansoms dart along at the top speed of good horses, the percentage of accidents is very small. It may be that this immunity from mishaps is to be attributed to the great care of the policemen, and to the fact that in the London streets vehicles of every sort are obliged to move briskly in line and to the left, not to the right, as in the case in most other places.

HOLLOWAY, the English manufacturer of cathartic pills, has accumulated great wealth and is devoting it to noble purposes. He has already erected two magnificent institutions—one for the insane of the "middle classes" and the other for the higher education of women. His gifts amount to nearly $5,000,000.

A Half Dollar Trial.

Mr. Ernest King, editor of the Fall River (Mass.) Sun, thus discourses upon the merits of St. Jacobs Oil: "Suffering with rheumatic pains I was Didymus as to remedies. I read of St. Jacobs Oil and said here goes for a half dollar trial. I bought a bottle and before it was half used the screw-wrench pains had gone and troubled me no longer."

TEA, which costs in this country anywhere from 50 cents to $1 a pound, can be bought in China for from 3 cents to 10 cents a pound. This may seem like a pretty big profit, but just think how expensive the chromos are.

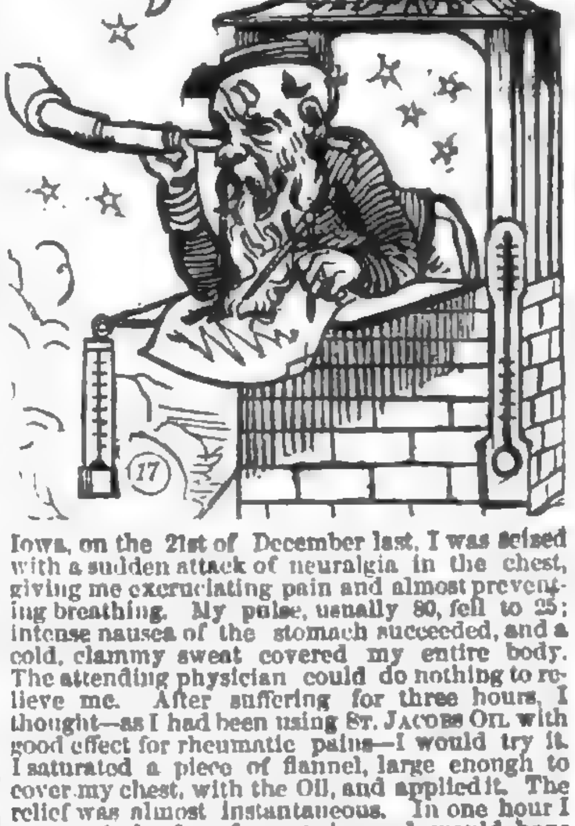
WEATHER--OR NOT.

We admire the philosophy of the unfortunate man, who, when everything had been swept away, said, "Well, there'll be weather and taxes left, at any rate." Alas! weather is the "yellow dog" of all subjects; everyone thinks it his special right to try to better the weather, and hurls his anathemas against "Old Probabilities," and all who endeavor to assist him in regulating the weather. The following communication is from Prof. Tice, of St. Louis, Mo., the renowned meteorologist and weather prophet of the West. It does not discuss the weather but something surely of more importance to those who suffer with that painful malady he speaks of: "The day after concluding my lectures at Burlington,



Iowa, on the 21st of December last, I was seized with a sudden attack of neuralgia in the chest, giving me excruciating pain and almost preventing breathing. My pulse, usually 80, fell to 25; intense nausea of the stomach succeeded, and a cold, clammy sweat covered my entire body. The attending physician could do nothing to relieve me. After suffering for three hours, I thought—as I had been using ST. JACOBS OIL with good effect for rheumatic pains—I would try it. I saturated a piece of flannel, large enough to cover my chest, with the Oil, and applied it. The relief was almost instantaneous. In one hour I was entirely free from pain, and would have taken the train to fill an appointment that night in a neighboring town had my friends not dissuaded me. As it was, I took the night train for my home, in St. Louis, and have not been troubled since.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and invaluable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

AT THE GREAT ITALIAN MUSICAL EXPOSITION

Recently closed at Milan, was probably the MOST EXTRAORDINARY COLLECTION OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, old and new, ever brought together; fully illustrating the great progress which has been made and present high excellence of this department of manufactures. After exhaustive examinations, tests and comparisons, extending through a period of several months, more than 250 Awards were made of medals and diplomas, in recognition of degrees of super-excellence attained in the various departments of musical manufacture. For REED INSTRUMENTS, including Organs and Harmoniums of all descriptions, European and American,

THE GRAND SILVER MEDAL,
being the only highest award in this department, was conferred upon the
MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN

Their manufacturers value this extraordinary distinction the more highly because of the importance of the occasion, especially as an INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION IN A COUNTRY EMINENTLY MUSICAL. The Mason & Hamlin Organs were honored by especial exhibition before the Court by CARLO DUCCI of Rome, and warm commendation from their Majesties, the King and Queen.

At all the great WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITIONS for fourteen years these Organs have received the HIGHEST HONORS, being the only American Organs which have received such at any.

IMPROVEMENTS. During the year just closed, this Company have introduced improvements of greater value than during any similar period since the introduction of the American Organ by them twenty years since.

ELEGANT STYLES are now received from their factories daily, surpassing in capacity and excellence anything which has before been produced, and certainly worthy to be ranked with the very finest musical instruments in the world. They are in cases of solid BLACK WALNUT, MAHOGANY, ASH, EBONIZED, etc.; net cash prices, $240, $330, $360, $390, $480, $570, $840 and $900.

POPULAR STYLES, including, also, the most valuable of the recent improvements, and adapted to all uses, public and private, in plain and elegant cases, are at $22, $30, $57, $66, $72, $78, $93, $99, $108, $114, to $500, and up.

EASY PAYMENTS. These organs are sold for cash or easy payments, or will be rented until rent pays for an organ.

A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, just issued, fully describing and illustrating MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED STYLES OF ORGANS, with net PRICE lists and circulars, will be sent free to any one desiring them. Certainly no one should buy or rent any organ without having seen these circulars, which contain much useful information about organs.

NO THIRD MRS. PERRY.

"She ain't the same sort as your first Henry," said Mrs. Perry, with an [illegible] of her upper lip over [illegible]

[illegible] herself a devout [illegible]. Mrs. Henry Perry soon found out [illegible] Lilac Farm was [illegible] more real than [illegible] of paradise.

"[illegible] don't know how to churn!" said [illegible] Perry, Senior, in amazement. [illegible] whatever did you brought Harry's first wife thought nothing [illegible] churning twenty pounds of but- [illegible] a morning, besides doing all the work and getting breakfast for four men."

[illegible] colored to the very roots of her [illegible] chestnut brown hair.

"[illegible] know nothing about the country, Mrs. Perry," she said, for she was [illegible] her term "mother," [illegible] by the special invitation which [illegible] been accorded. "I was educated, [illegible] boarding-school; after I [illegible] I taught school until I met [illegible] and——"

"[illegible] dare say," said Mrs. Perry, dryly; "[illegible] if you are going to be a farmer's [illegible] is high time you acquainted [illegible] with some of the duties pertain- [illegible] your position. My son's first wife, [illegible] a model."

[illegible] looked eagerly up.

"[illegible] Mrs. Perry," said she, "tell [illegible] she used to do. Of course, I [illegible] no experience, but——"

"[illegible]" said Mrs. Perry, looking up [illegible] top fringe of the curtains and [illegible] the tips of her fingers reflect- [illegible] together, "she had a faculty, [illegible] had. She was a famous cook. [illegible] fresh pies every day, for no [illegible] be expected to like stale pies. [illegible] breakfast biscuits were like [illegible] of snow, and we mostly had [illegible] for supper, with honey and fresh [illegible] sauce. She always got up at 4 [illegible] of a Monday morning to do the [illegible] Henry's shirts have never [illegible] the same since Dorothy was re- [illegible] And I wish you could have [illegible] ironings. The sewing circle [illegible] once a month, and the teas [illegible] got up were the talk of the [illegible] hood. And there was a Sister [illegible] meeting here once a fort- [illegible] and the Singers' Symposium [illegible] Friday. She was a noble-hearted Christian, Dorothy was! And then she did all the family sewing. She could not reconcile it to her own conscience and her husband's income, she said, 'to hire such work done.'"

And Alice, who had committed the enormity of having a dress made by a dressmaker, colored scarlet and hung her head.

"Then at butchering time," proceeded relentless Mrs. Perry, Senior, "Dorothy always made the tripe and sausage-meat and corned the hams herself; and she cleaned house four times a year. She was a master-hand at quilting, and she always made her own bonnets. A woman can save so much for her husband in that way. As for the butter and cheese, I think, if she hadn't died so suddenly, poor thing, that she could have beaten any record in the country!"

Alice sighed deeply. How could she, a slender, inexperienced girl of twenty, hope to cope with these marvelous attainments?

"Henry never told me all this," said she.

"I suppose he has thought of it many a time," said Mrs. Perry, Senior. "But perhaps he didn't like to allude to it while you was playing on your melodeon and reading your books. Dorothy never got any time to read!"

"But if you'll teach me," pleaded Alice, "I will do my best to learn."

She locked the melodeon, put away the books and portfolio and her basket of fancy needle-work, and set herself resolutely to work to fill the place of the departed Dorothy.

"Why, what a little housewife you are," said Henry, laughing when she showed him the tray of golden butter that she had churned, and succeeded in burning her fingers at the ironing fire and reducing her pretty complexion to scarlet in cooking buckwheat cakes for breakfast.

"I want to be one," said Alice, wistfully.

She cut up squares of bright-colored calico into patchwork, she studied the cookery-book until her head ached, she caught a heavy cold working over butter in the damp dairy-house, and sprained her wrist washing clothes, which, after all, looked dim and dirty. She rose early and went to bed late; she counted eggs, mixed up whitewash, made herself sick chopping up sausage meat, and strained her back lifting a kettle of pickles off the fire, and still she strove resolutely on.

"I should like to do just what Dorothy did," she said to herself. "I don't think Henry is quite pleased when I am so busy in the kitchen of an evening that I cannot spare time to come in and hear him read the Waverly novels aloud. And my feet ached so this morning with the cream skimming that I could not walk with him to the haying ground. But I am doing my duty, and that ought to be reward enough!"

That same afternoon, however, poor Alice was forced to flee to her own room with a sick headache, and seek the refuge of her pillow. There Mrs. John Bonney, a cheerful little neighbor, found her.

"Sick, are you?" asked Mrs. Bonney.

"I'm not very well," acknowledged Alice.

"Ah," said Mrs. Bonney, "I thought so!"

"What do you mean?" asked Alice.

"Why, you've been killing yourself by inches!" said Mrs. Bonney, "as fast as you could. I've seen it all. I'm not your next door neighbor for nothing!"

"I am trying to do my duty," pleaded Alice, with filling eyes. "I'm trying to be like my husband's first wife!"

"Fiddlesticks!" said Mrs. Bonney. "Like Dorothy Parker, indeed! Why, she was nothing on earth but a household drudge, and finally drudged herself to death, without anybody being particularly sorry for her. She never visited, she never read, she never kept up with the progress of life's march around her. Any machine could have filled her place."

"Mrs. Bonney, you ought not to talk so," said Mrs. Perry, uneasily.

"It's the truth," said Mrs. Bonney. "However, do as you please. It's a privilege which people generally claim, I have observed; kill yourself if you like. Perhaps the third Mrs. Perry will be a little more sensible."

So Mrs. Bonney put the bouquet of tea-rose buds, which she had brought, into water, and tripped laughingly home, while Alice, clasping her hands over her throbbing temples, tried to ask herself which was right, herself or Mrs. Bonney, and in which direction her path of duty really and actually lay.

And it was at this critical moment that she heard the nasal, monotonous voice of her mother-in-law down-stairs talking to her husband, and uttering the sentence which opens our sketch.

"She ain't the same sort as your first wife, Henry," said Mrs. Perry, Sr. "And she never will be, let her try as she will. She hasn't got the faculty, you see."

She lay there quite still and quiet, with closed eyes. She never opened them when Henry Perry himself tiptoed into the room, and, believing her asleep, tiptoed out again, muttering to himself:

"Poor little daisy, she is entirely done up!"

The next morning, however, Alice rose and dressed herself with care.

"Bless me," said Mrs. Perry, Sr., "where are you going, Alice?"

"To the village," answered Alice.

"What for?" cross-questioned the elder matron.

"To engage a dressmaker and seamstress first," said Mrs. Perry, Jr., "and to get a strong girl to do the housework next."

"A——girl!" screamed the old lady. "Dorothy never—"

"No," said Alice; "I know she never kept a servant. But Dorothy cleaned and churned and sewed herself out of the world. I've no intention of settling my own career in that sort of a way. I find that I can't do the work of this farm myself without breaking down my health, and shutting myself out of the world of books and science. I do not think my husband desires such a sacrifice—"

"Of course I don't," said Henry, promptly. "The house has been as lonely as a convent since you buried yourself in the kitchen and dairy. I married you for a companion, not a drudge. Have half a dozen servants, if you like, Alice, only let us have books and music and pleasant woodland walks again."

"Thank you, dearest," said Alice, as she kissed his forehead.

Mrs. Perry, Sr., rolled up her eyes and clasped her hands, and declared sotto voce she didn't know what this world was coming to.

Mrs. Bonney was feeding chickens at her own door when Alice Perry returned from her walk to the village.

"Are you better?" asked this young red republican, smiling cordially.

"Thanks!" Alice answered, "I am much better. I have just engaged a sewing woman and a stout Swedish servant girl to do the housework at the farm. I am no longer ambitious to do as Dorothy did."

And Mrs. Bonney waved her sunbonnet in the air, and exclaimed:

"Bravo! There will be no third Mrs. Perry, after all."

And her words were prophetic.—Rural Press.

AN EDITOR.

Editor Watterson, in the Louisville Courier-Journal, speaks as follows about conducting a newspaper: "Some people estimate the ability of a periodical and the talent of its editor by the quantity of its original matter. It is comparatively an easy task for a frothy writer to string out a column of words upon any and all subjects. His ideas may flow in one weak, washy, everlasting flood, and the command of his language may enable him to string them together like bunches of onions, and yet his paper may be but a meager and poor concern. Indeed, the mere writing part of editing a paper is but a small portion of the work. The care, the time employed in selecting, is far more important, and the fact of a good editor is better shown by his selections than anything else; and that, we know, is half the battle. But, we have said, an editor ought to be estimated, his labor understood and appreciated, by the general conduct of his paper—its tone, its uniform, consistent course, aims, manliness, its dignity, and its propriety. To preserve these as they should be preserved is enough to occupy fully the time and attention of any man. If to this be added the general supervision of the details of publication which most editors have to encounter, the wonder is how they find time to write at all."

THE DOG'S EYES WERE BEST.

A gentleman, accompanied by a favorite dog, visited the studio of a rising artist. There was a picture on the easel, and the dog began to bark furiously at it.

"Nature may be relied upon after all," said the gentleman. "The best evidence of the faithfulness with which you have painted that dog in the background is the earnestness with which my dog barks at him."

"But that isn't a dog," said the artist, flushing; "it is a cow."

The gentleman was nonplused for a moment, but he quickly replied, "Well, the dog's eyes are better than mine; he never did like cows."

A JURY OF SIX.

"I hate to live in a new country," said Jones, "where there is no law." "Yer bet yer," chimed in Thompson. "Law is the only thing that keeps us out of everlasting chaos." "Yes, indeed," said a legal gentleman present. "It is the bulwark of the poor man's liberty, the shield which the strong arm of justice throws over the weak, the solace and the balsam of the unfortunate and wronged, the—"

"Oh, stop 'er," remarked the man with one eye. "I won't have it that way. Law is a boss invention for rascals of all grades. Give me a country where there is no law and I can take care of myself every time. Now, for instance, when I lived in Ohio I got a dose of law that I will never forget. I was in partnership with a man named Butler, and one morning we found our cashier missing with $3,000. He had dragged the safe and put out. Well, I started after him and caught him in Chicago, where he was splurging around on the money. I got him arrested, and there was an examination. Well, all the facts were brought out, and the defense moved that the case be dismissed, as the prosecution did not make out a case in the name of the firm, and that if there was a firm the copartnership had not been shown by any evidence before the court. To my astonishment, the court said the plea was O. K., and dismissed the case. Before I could realize what was up, the thief had walked off. Well, I followed him to St. Louis, and there I tackled him again. I sent for my partner, and we made a complete case, going for him in the name of the Commonwealth and Smith, Butler & Co. Well, the lawyer for the defense claimed that the money being taken from a private drawer in the safe was my money exclusively, and that my partner had nothing to do with it; that the case should be prosecuted by me individually, and not by the firm. The old 'bloke' who sat on the bench wiped his spectacles, grunted round a while, and dismissed the case. Away goes the man again. Then I got another hitch on him and tried to convict him of theft, but the court held that he should be charged with embezzlement. Some years after, I tackled him again, and they let him go. Statutes of limitation, you see. Statutes of limitation, you see. Well, I concluded to give it up, and I did.

"But about four years afterward I was down in Colorado and a man pointed to another and said: 'That fellow has just made a hundred thousand in a mining swindle.' I looked, and it was my old cashier. I followed him to the hotel and nailed him in his room with the money. 'Now,' I says, 'Billy, do you recognize your old boss?' and of course he did. Says I: 'Bill, I want that three thousand you stole from me, with the interest, and all legal and traveling expenses.'

"'Ah, you do?' says he; 'didn't the courts decide that——'

"'Curse the courts,' says I, putting a six-shooter a foot long under his nose. 'This is the sort of legal document that I'm travelin' on now. This is the complaint, warrant, indictment, Judge, jury, verdict and sentence, all combined, and the firm of Colt & Co., New Haven, are my attorneys in the case. When they speak they talk straight to the point of your mug, you bloody larceny thief. This jury of six, of which I am foreman, is liable to be discharged at any moment. No technicality or statutes of limitations here, and a stay of proceedings won't last over four seconds. I want $10,000 to square my bill, or I'll blow your blasted brains out.' Well, he passed over the money right away, and said he hoped there'd be no hard feelings. Now, there's some Colorado law for you, and it's the kind for me! Eh, boys?" And the crowd, with one accord, concurred in the cheapness and efficacy of the plan by which a man could carry his court on his hip, instead of appealing to the blind goddess in Chicago and St. Louis. —Salt Lake Tribune.

EDGAR A. POE'S DEATH.

Statement of the Hospital Physician Who Attended Him in His Last Illness.

[From the Baltimore Sun.]

Dr. John J. Moran, of Falls Church, Fairfax county, Va., who was resident physician at Washington University Hospital (now the Church Home and Infirmary), on North Broadway, from March, 1849, to October, 1855, visited the institution for the first time since the dissolution of his official connection therewith. Dr. Moran pointed out the room occupied by Edgar Allan Poe, and related the circumstances of his death, which occurred Oct. 7, 1849. The doctor states that on the 6th of October, about 9 a. m., Mr. Poe was brought to the hospital in a hack driven by an Irishman, who stated that he had found his passenger on Light street wharf. In reply to an inquiry whether the gentleman was intoxicated, the hackman stated that there was no smell of liquor about him, and that he had lifted him into the carriage like a child. Dr. Moran did not recognize his patient until the hackman presented a card bearing Poe's name. Mr. Poe was unconscious and very pale. He was placed in the third-story room of the turret, at the southwest corner of the building, about seven-by-ten feet in size. A nurse was stationed at the door, with instructions to call Dr. Moran when the patient awoke, which occurred in twenty minutes. The doctor, being much interested in his patient, went immediately to his side. A glance sufficed to show that Mr. Poe was extremely ill, and he was so informed. In reply to a question he said he did know how long he had been sick, and could give no account of himself. He was much surprised when informed that he was in a hospital. He stated that he had stopped at a hotel on Pratt street, where a trunk containing his papers and manuscripts had been left. The trunk was sent for, but the owner made no further reference to it.

Dr. Moran proceeded to make a diagnosis of the case. The patient was very weak, but there was no tremor of the limbs, no agitation of the body, no smell of liquor on the breath or person, nor any symptom of intoxication. Owing to the weak condition of the patient, Dr. Moran decided to administer a stimulant, and so informed him. Mr. Poe said: "If I thought its potency would transport me to the elysian bowers of the undiscovered spirit world, I would not touch it."

Dr. Moran then proposed an anodyne, when Mr. Poe rejoined: "Twin sister to the doomed and crazed in perdition." Mr. Poe continued to converse most despondingly, but was relieved by short intervals of sleep. As his body grew weaker his mind retained its force, and his conscious moments were marked by vivid flashes of his characteristic genius. Near the end Mr. Poe became as gentle as a child.

He died an hour past midnight, sixteen hours after his arrival at the hospital. The cause of death was exhaustion of the nervous fluid, caused by exposure, hunger and other things acting upon a sensitive organization.

The remains were laid in state in the large reception room in the rotunda of the college, where they were viewed by many persons. Fully fifty ladies received locks of the dead poet's hair, that fell in jet-black ringlets about his brow. The funeral took place on the afternoon of Oct. 8, 1849, the remains being interred in the burying ground of Westminster Presbyterian Church, where the monument has since been erected.

THE FOX AND THE WOLF.

A Fox who was making a Journey across the country to see his Grandmother once more before she Died discovered a Wolf burying something beside the Highway. He slipped into a fence-corner and waited until the Wolf had passed on, and then crept forward and unearthed the Object, which proved to be a dead chicken.

"Ah, ha!" chuckled Reynard, "this comes from Keeping one's Eyes open as one travels. The Hare would not have seen the Wolf at all, and the Opossum would not have had the Patience to wait for him to move on. It's a Big Joke on the Wolf, and here goes for a square meal."

The Fox devoured his dinner with much smacking of lips, but had scarcely finished when terrible pains began to rack his frame and he fell down in the greatest torment and was soon breathing his last. When the Wolf returned and saw the dead body of Reynard and the feathers of the Chicken scattered around, he scratched his ear and wrote in his diary:

"Moral: Came to his death by being too smart."—Detroit Free Press.

Mrs. Lincoln, the wife of Abraham Lincoln, died at her home in Springfield, Ill., on the 16th inst.

Senator Ben Hill's condition is growing worse. A telegram of the 17th, says that he is likely to die at any moment.

Senator Ben Harrison, of Indiana, is spoken of as a suitable candidate for the Presidency, from the fact that he has an army of relatives who are anxious for office.

In Waterford, Miss., a fellow went into a newspaper office last week and fired four shots with a pistol at the managing editor, but did no damage. Whereupon, the said m. e. fired five times at the intruder, and wounded him twice, but not fatally. A newspaper article was the cause of the shooting.

The Alabama Baptist State Convention consisting of 160 delegates, met at Huntsville, on the 12th, and organized by electing Judge John Haralson, of Selma, President; Rev. Dr. Cleveland, of Selma, and and Rev. J. J. D. Renfro, of Talladega, Vice Presidents, and Mr. B. B. Davis of Montgomery, Secretary.

A duel was fought, near Petersburg, Va., on the 16th inst., between Joseph Addison and Richard Garland. Addison was killed and Garland was wounded in the wrist. The duel resulted from Garland's telling a young lady, to whom Addison was engaged, that Addison was flirting with her.

A dozen or more deaths of boys from lockjaw, caused by wounds on July 4th, by toy pistols are reported from New-York and New England. A dipatch from Cincinnati says, there has been six deaths from lockjaw in this city and Covington within the past three days. The victims are all boys, who were wounded in the hand by toy pistols on July 4th. In most cases the wounds were apparently trifling.

The Alabama Baptists.

HUNTSVILLE, July 13.—The Alabama Baptist Convention re-assembled to-day. The State Mission Board reports a prosperous year. One hundred and thirty-two points destitute of churches, have had mission service; 148 preaching stations have been maintained; 41 missionaries employed; 12 churches and 62 Sunday schools organized, and 588 members united to the church. The report states that the churches take little interest in colored evangelical work, which is at a standstill. Bible and colportage work is cramped for want of funds. Twelve colporteurs were kept in the field, and by making missionaries do colportage work the board proposes to maintain one colporteur for every $100 furnished by the churches. The mission work is recommended to be put on a cash basis. The amount expended in State missionary work was $8,776. The report was refered by subjects to committees. The report on temperance was re-committed, the convention being unwilling to adopt the features of total abstinence and prohibitory legislation recommended. The convention decided to employ a State evangelist and to maintain a colportage fund.

The Egyptian War.

Arabi Pasha was soon vanquished. With the navies of England and France menacing destruction, and a city burning all around him, he had good cause for the evacuation of Alexandria. England has lent her aid in suppressing a rebellion which the Khedive was unable to suppress. Against only about 4,000 very much disorganized troops her success could not have been questioned. Turkey protests against the action of the English Admiral, and France looks on with a jealous eye, and a desire to have a "finger in the pie," while both Turkey and France hate the rebellious Arabi Pasha with an undying hate.

England could well afford to purchase what Egyptian territory she might wish for, but prefers to get it in a cheaper way, and Alexandria pays the cost by pillage and fire. The following are among the most important of the later telegrams:

ALEXANDRIA, July 14.—It is stated that Arabi Pasha has only four thousand disorganized troops. Two hundred marines have been ordered to march through the town and shoot all persons rioting.

LONDON, July 14.—A dispatch from Alexandria, dated 4 P. M., says: "The town is totally ruined. Houses from the great square to the Custom-House have been plundered. In the square itself and other wealthy European quarters there is hardly a building not ruined or still burning. The court-house of international tribunal has so far escaped. The Anglo-Egyptian Bank is also preserved. The streets are strewn with empty clock and jewel cases and similar debris. But very few dead bodies are found. Two-thirds of the troops deserted during the bombardment."

Benson Jottings.

The name of Mr. A. J. Hall, as a Democratic candidate for representative in our county, seems to strike people outside of the political rings with great force. Mr. Hall's irreproachable character, his acquaintance with men, his thorough knowledge of our county and its necessities, his fine ability, his untiring energy, his affable manners, and above all his earnestness, eminently qualify him for the responsible position of Representative in the Legislature. He could do more for the county and the country at large, than any man who could be sent to represent us in the Legislature at this time. Mr. Hall's good will in behalf of his fellow men, and honest efforts to promote their welfare, would at once commend him to his fellow members of the General Assembly from other counties. His work in the House would not show forth in frothy speeches; but, in earnest and sincere efforts to benefit the entire people of his county. Franklin attributed his success as a public man not to his power of speech or fluent language, for in these he was very deficient, but to his known integrity and spotless character. A practical man is what we want and not a political one. Mr. Hall of course, had no desire to go to the Legislature until he was earnestly solicited by numerous friends outside of the political rings. And the county politicians are not likely to hunt him up or urge him. But if they are wise this time, they fall into line, and take up the march to the victory on the first Monday in August which is insured by the union of the different political elements in the county, on Mr. Hall, which will easily elect him; and his name gives strength to the ticket all along the line.

School commences at Mulberry Academy, on Monday, July 10th, under the management of Miss Fannie McMath who has made herself a name as a faithful teacher. We truthfully say that persons desiring to educate could do no better at the more expensive boarding schools than to get their children under Miss Fannie's magnetic influence.

Crops are now looking better in this section of country than for ten years past. JERE.

The Livingston Journal is right we think when it takes issue with the Selma Times on the exemption of certain industries, as manufacturing, from taxation. We believe that all property ought to be subject to taxation, and if there is going to be any exemption at all it ought to be the farmer, for this now needs more protection than anything else, and especially when it is the source of almost everything thing there is of wealth in this state.—Eutaw Mirror.

Alabama Views.

Calera has a lodge of Good Templars.

There are 200 visitors at Blount Springs.

Talladega Mountain Home: The farmers will come nearer "living at home" this winter than at any time for many years.

Union Springs Herald: The sound of the hammer and saw can be heard on every hand. All kinds of mechanics are busy and the town continues on a building boom.

L. B. Musgrove, Esq., editor of the Mountain Eagle, is the Democratic nominee for Representative in Walker county. He will canvass the county and divide time with B. F. Tingle, the Independent candidate.

Gainesville Reporter: A negro man was arraigned before Justice Putton Tuesday, charged with stealing six ears of corn from a neighbor's roasting ear patch. He was bound over to Circuit Court.

Mr. Whitton, who lives on Dr. Dancy's place, near Sherman, fed a wagon load of cotton seed to his hogs, now he is hauling his hogs away in the same wagon—it killed 'em.

P. L. Mitchell, captain of the snag boat Noxubee, states upon oath that a negro man in his employ eat at one sitting four pounds of bacon, forty biscuits and thirty-six cups of coffee. There were two witnesses besides himself to the eating.

Fayette Journal: We hear of some farmers in Fayette county who say they will make corn enough to do them two years, if the seasons continue favorable.

Evergreen News: There have been good rains generally throughout the county, and farmers are jubilant over prospects for good crops. The corn, as a general thing, is laid by, and promises the best crop for several years.

Of the crops in that section, the Birmingham Daily Age says:

Within the last few days we have met and conversed with farmers from nearly every beat in the county, and learn that the crops generally are very promising. The early corn is assured; the late corn, with another rain, will yield abundantly, and the cotton is in fine condition.

The Shelby County Republican Convention met at Calera, on the 13th inst., and placed N. B. Mardis, of Calhoun county, in the field as a candidate for the Legislature. Only six of seventeen precincts were represented. Mardis was formerly radical Probate Judge of Shelby county, but has lately removed to Anniston, Calhoun county.

Tuskaloosa Times: Tuskaloosa is on a "boom." There is no doubt about that. Unquestionably, we have a prosperous future before us. Who would have thought, one year ago, that our beautiful streets would ever be desecrated, as they have been, and the horse allowed to pull his car undisturbed along our shady groves? The rank thistle has ceased to nod in the winds, and the wild fox has been scared out of his hole.

Temperance Herald: The liquor traffic respects neither the living nor the dead. The 4th inst., was advertised to be a grand gala day at Pickett Springs Park (?). On the night of the 3d inst., Mr. A. J. Boland, proprietor and lessee of the grounds, died. The preparations went on, the day was observed with pomp and revelry, and the bar-room remained opened and prosecuted its unholy traffic during the entire day, although the proprietor lay in his bed-room shrouded for the grave. Humanity where is thy shame!

The Tuskaloosa Gazette has the following item on one of Tuskaloosa's old land-marks, Dr. Rufus Haywood:

Dr. Haywood, in the happy days "before the war," used to be one of the leading physicians of our town. His health having failed him, he retired from his practice and to a great extent from the society of his friends. He seldom shows himself on our streets. His 81st birth-day having rolled around one day this week, a number of his old friends called on him at the residence of Mrs. Tho's Prince. They were pleased to find him looking well. The Doctor deserves all the attention of respect and regard any of our citizens can show him—a fine old gentleman of the old school type.

We hear that Prof. W. A. Smith, is thinking of removing to Clanton in order to give his family the benefit of the splendid educational advantages offered here. We hope that he will come, and promise him a hearty welcome on the part our citizens.

The last issue of the Temperance Herald, the organ of the Grand Lodge I. O. G. T., of Alabama, speaks in most complimentary terms of our town and the View.

Verbena Views.

Z. Y. X. wants to know if it is possible that Verbena cannot furnish a correspondent for the View. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate a doubt as to the brain-power of our enterprising village? If so, we beg to inform him that notwithstanding our apparent indifference, in the past, on the subject of education, we have, in our midst, men of intelligence and enterprise, who are even now, devising ways and means for increasing the attractiveness of Verbena, by erecting an academy where her youth and the children from a distance, may enjoy the facilities of acquiring a good practical training for the business pursuits of life.

Verbena is by far the "loveliest village" on the S. & N. R. R. She already has a large, well filled store-house, (besides other minor ones) far surpassing any one between Montgomery and Birmingham. Her hotel, when completed will be a magnificent ornament to the village. And her academy, when built and put in operation, will cap the climax of her beauty and utility.

Mr. Z. Y. X., does Mr. "View" boil down your items? He does mine. What a pity the "View" is not larger.

Health too good for the doctors. Rains seasonable. Crops booming. Community quiet and peacable.

I would write more but for the boiling. OCCASIONAL.

Delegates to the Congressional Convention.

A call having been made for a convention to assemble at the Courthouse in Clanton, on the 12th of July, at 12 o'clock m., to appoint delegates to the Congressional Convention which is to assemble at Dadeville, August 30, and to transact such other business as might come before it. The time having arrived, and owing to the weather, and the consequent small attendance it has been decided by the committee that it is inexpedient to transact any business except appoint delegates to the Congressional Convention. Therefore, with the advice and concurrence of the delegates present, we do hereby appoint the following delegates to represent Chilton county in said Congressional Convention:

Beat 1—William Marcus; beat 2—John B. Randall; beat 3—William Walker; beat 4—W. A. Col[illegible]; beat 5—A. J. Brooks; beat 6—J. L. Farr; beat 7—Minor Woo[illegible]; beat 8—T. E. Callier.

Should any of the delegates appointed fail to attend, then those present will cast the entire vote of the county in said Congressional Convention.

Jemison Items.

Some sickness. Mrs. E. Gaines is very low.

Mrs. Allen, of Brierfield, is visiting friends and relatives in this place.

We see that the correspondent of the Shelby Sentinel spells the name of our town "Jamison" instead of "Jemison." The latter is correct, as the village was named in honor of Col. Robt. Jemison, of Tuskaloosa, who at one time operated gold mines in the vicinity.

Prof. A. E. Burns, who has been visiting friends and relatives in Bibb county, has returned, and will reopen his school on the 17th inst.

We are pleased to welcome Miss Julia Fincher, of Montevallo, to our town as an assistant teacher of the Jemison Institute. Two of our farmers Messrs. Langston & Copper have thrashed 3,950 bushels of small grain this season.

Crop prospects are fine, and we trust the farmers will be able to [illegible] themselves independent of the merchant in the future.

Verbena—Its Present and Future

The Montgomery Advertiser, in its issue of the 13th inst, contains the following deserved notice of this beautiful little town:

The town of Verbena, situated in Chilton county, Alabama, is attracting considerable attention on account of its healthy location, fine society and rapid improvement. Being easy of access. Verbena is the summer home of many Montgomerians, where, after the cares and fatigues of business in the city, they seek and find quiet repose, unannoyed by sharp-billed mosquitoes, hot and oppressive nights. Already Verbena has a magnificent hotel nearly completed. Mr. A. J. Brooks has erected a store that would do credit to any city, and the necessary funds are already subscribed to build a male academy. Being only thirty one miles from Montgomery, Verbena is sure to be the summer resort of a large number of Montgomerians, who, seeking relief from business cares and the heat and dust of the city, will hie to a place where cool nights, good water, and fine scenery are to be found.

Situated about three quarters of a mile beyond Verbena, are the celebrated mills of the Pratt Saw Mill Co., whose products are favorably known throughout the entire West. These mills were established in 1880, and from the very inception of the enterprise, it has been an undoubted succes. Owning 30,000 acres of land, on which stands as fine long-leaf yellow pine timber as ever sprang from mother earth, having a railroad of the same guage of the S. & N. Alabama, extending eight miles out into this body of timber, the Pratt Saw Mill Co. have the ability to furnish timber of all lengths, dimensions, and grades, and fit either for a hovel or a palace. The Pratt Saw Mill Co. has two large Lane & Bodley Co. saw mills with a capacity of 30,000 feet of lumber each per day. These mills during the dullest season, have been kept running to their utmost capacity, owing to the large amount of orders that are placed with the Pratt Saw Mill Co. While the Pratt Saw Mill Co. manufactures an immense amount of lumber that is used in the amount of bridges, houses and cars, the building of dressed and matched flooring that it ships monthly to the cities in the West, (even as far as Colorado) would astonish any one not acquainted with the facts. With four of Cuman and Wolff's patent drying kilns, they are never without an ample supply of thoroughly dry flooring strips, and with two of Fry & Co.'s best planing machines, they are unabled to supply the wants of their numerous patrons. In addition to the facilities the Pratt Saw Mill Company has for furnishing any amount of dressed and matched flooring, they have in stock about 4,000,000 feet of lumber stacked and ready to meet the requirements of the trade. The Pratt Saw Mill Company is another evidence of the wisdom, foresight and enterprise of H. F. DeBardeleben, to whose sterling qualities of head and heart Alabama to-day owes so much; for while engaged in gigantic plans to develop the coal and iron resources of Alabama, he has made the lumber business to boom up and become one of the most valuable in the State.

Of this vast enterprise, so worthy of Alabama. Mr. A. P. DeBardelaben is President, Maj. John L. Harrell is Superintendent, Mr. S. T. Brittle, is the energetic, worthy and faithful Secretary and Treasurer.

The mills are in their babyhood, but give certain indications that a great future awaits them, as well as no uncertain intimation that such enterprises will yet be the prelude to Alabama's growth, prosperity and happiness.

Miss Dixie Darwin, a charming young lady who has been visiting Miss Luela Lanier, returned to her home at Huntsville, on last Friday, to the regret of many newly made friends.

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK.

The Yellowstone National Park extends sixty-five miles north and south and fifty-five miles east and west, comprising 3,575 square miles, and is all 6,000 feet or more above the sea-level Yellowstone lake, twenty miles by fifteen, has an altitude of 7,788 feet. The mountain ranges which hem in the valleys on every side rise to the height of 10,000 to 12,000 feet, and are always covered with snow. This great park, says Mr. Strahorn, contains the most striking of mountains, gorges, falls, rivers and lakes in the whole Yellowstone region. The springs on Gardiner's river cover an area of about one square mile, and three or four square miles thereabout are occupied by the remains of springs which have ceased to flow. The natural basins into which these springs flow are from four to six feet in diameter and from one to four feet in depth. The principal ones are located upon terraces midway up the sides of the mountain. The banks of the Yellowstone river abound with ravines and canons, which are carved out of the heart of the mountains through the hardest rocks. The most remarkable of these is the canon of Tower creek and Column mountain. The latter, which extends along the eastern bank of the river for upward of two miles, is said to resemble the Giant's Causeway. The canon of Tower creek is about ten miles in length and is so deep and gloomy that it is called "The Devil's Den." Where Tower creek ends the Grand canon begins. It is twenty miles in length, impassable throughout, and inaccessible at the water's edge except at a few points. Its rugged edges are from 200 to 500 yards apart, and its depth is so profound that no sound ever reaches the ear from the bottom. The Grand canon contains a great multitude of hot springs of sulphur, sulphate of copper, alum, etc. In the number and magnitude of its hot springs and geysers, the Yellowstone Park surpasses all the rest of the world. There are probably fifty geysers that throw a column of water to the height of from 50 to 200 feet, and it is stated that there are not fewer than 5,000 springs; there are two kinds, those depositing lime and those depositing silica. The temperature of the calcareous springs is from 160 to 170 deg., while that of the others rises to 200 or more. The principal collections are the upper and lower geyser basins of the Madison river and the calcareous springs on Gardiner's river. The great falls are marvels to which adventurous travelers have gone only to return and report that they are parts of the wonders of this new American wonderland.

CLAY PIPES.

The red-clay pipe is made in this city at the rate of about 2,000,000 a year, worth 5 or 10 cents apiece, or $10,000 or $20,000. The clay comes from Martha's Vineyard, Governor's island, N. Y., and Lake Michigan. Three hundred tons are used in a year. The three kinds of clays are mixed or ground together. A workman with a pile of clay behind him makes from it single rolls of clay, each large enough to make a pipe. The next worker places the clay in a pipe mold, runs a wire into the stem part, puts under a lever and makes the bowl. Fifteen hundred a day are molded by one man. The molds may be of various designs to form the decorated bowl. The latest is the "Land League," representing eviction on one side and prison life on the other. In pipes, as in other things, novelties must be given the smoking public, and as those interested in Land Leagues are fair smokers this pipe will be bought for use and for patriotism.

After the molding process the pipes are laid away to dry or drain until the water is well out of them. They are then put in fire-clay receivers, 190 in each, and placed in the furnace or kiln to be burned. The oven holds 70,000 pipes. They are then heated to a white heat. The red-clay pipe has a wooden stem and a silver band. The stems are made from maple by machinery designed for the purpose. They are made black by the process of enameling. The band is made from a circular piece of brass; that is to say, a circular piece of brass without break or seam is turned into a cylinder about an inch in length. Some of the pipes are stained, while others are left in the color of clay to be stained or colored by the smoker.—Providence Journal.

AS HARP MAN IN MAINE.

A man down in Maine, who took his pay in pews for moving a meeting house, set to work after the building was settled on its new site, started a revival in the village, and when the religious interest was at its height sold out his seats at an advance of $5,000 over what they were set off to him for. The late census shows that Maine is growing in wealth. The census must be correct.—Detroit Free Press.

An exchange contains a long article entitled, "Was Hamlet Mad?" Well, Hamlet didn't seem to like it very well that his father had been murdered and the murderer had married his mother, but you can't judge much by appearances. He may have been tickled half to death to think that the old man had been so neatly slagged.—Peck's Sun.

KNEE BREECHES.

We devoutly hope that the above style of garment will not become the proper thing in dress. Nature has not specially designated us as the proper figure to fill a pair of knee breeches, and an all-wise Providence did not select us as the man to wear a close-fitting wardrobe.

This is the only striking difference between ourselves and the lamented Washington, deceased.

In the first place, it is a moral impossibility for us to maintain a friendly feeling and a close relation between our knee breeches and stockings. A garter that would be tight at the knee generally slides down over the concave calf and hangs on the instep like the interfering machine that a trotting horse wears. The garter has always been a mystery, a snare and a delusion to us. It does not match our complexion.

Once we wore knee breeches and long white stockings at a masquerade. Later we took off our mask because it was hot and uncomfortable, and because it was a hollow mockery. When a man has a knee joint like the sheet-iron elbow of an old-fashioned stovepipe and a calf like a lead pencil, it is useless for him to mask his face.

Knee breeches are made for men who are æsthetic, and who walk a good deal. Sedentary men either get too fat or too lean, and they do not create a good impression in this style of garment.

Then, too, the foot should have a symmetrical shape in order to match this kind of apparel. A flat, long foot with abnormal heel and stupendous bunions on it does not fit this peculiar garb. It looks out of place and sui generis, as it were.

Another reason for strong opposition on the part of the press relative to the knee pants is the fact that the ladies, who are now rapidly adopting the modern changes in men's apparel, will, of course, take up with this one. We do not feel, as a husband and father, like enlarging upon this aspect of the matter. We never can write about any subject when we are in pain. We must still this heartache before we can proceed.

* * * * * * * *

To resume: We deem it bad enough for mankind to wear pantaloons that bag at the knee when we sit down, without embracing a garment that will open at the knee like a Soldene smile when we take a chair.

Knee breeches can meet with no cordiality on our part. We cannot hold out our hand in a friendly, heart-felt welcome to a wardrobe that makes a slim man look like the memory of the Greenback party.—Boomerang.

HE WOULDN'T HAVE IT.

A boy owned a stalwart gander, and he thought it would be a good joke to tie a fish-line to the leg of the gander, with a hook properly baited, and watch the result. So he fixed the gander with a line on one leg about ten feet long, at the end of which was a pickerel hook and a frog for bait. The gander was driven into the mill-pond, where he swam around for half an hour, turning flip-flaps and diving for food. Suddenly the gander felt a pull at his leg, and he looked as surprised as the "Lone Fisherman" when he caught a whale. The gander seemed to think there was something the matter with him, and he looked down at his feet under the water to see into it. The pickerel began to yank, and the gander made up his mind that he was not well and wanted to go home. He started for the shore, but the pickerel on the hook wanted to go the other way, and it was nip and tuck for a time. The gander, to those on shore who were watching, seemed frightened, and at times would act as though saying his prayers and asking for mercy, and then he would get mad and try and fly ashore, when the pickerel would pull him back. They say it was a fine study to watch the expression of the features of the gander. He seemed to realize that a change was about to come over him, and while he hoped for the best, he seemed to be prepared for the worst. After half an hour of the hardest work he had ever done the gander came ashore and dragged a six-pound pickerel up the bank, and the boys took off the pickerel and put on another frog, and tried to induce the gander to go and take another swim, but he wouldn't have it. They couldn't drive him in. He looked at them as he ran through between their legs as though saying, "Boys, this may be fun for you, but you have crushed a noble nature. Not any more pickerel in mine, if you please," and he flew off toward the barn, squawking as though his heart would break. Since then the gander has never gone into the water.

Very few prettier girls have I ever seen than one who sat near me an evening not long ago at the table d'hote at the Continental, Philadelphia. The loveliest of auburn hair, beautiful features, smallest of mouths and prettiest of teeth—all combined to make her exceedingly attractive. Turning to a queer-looking little old lady at her side, she suddenly exclaimed: "O, ma! ain't them mince-pies beastly!"—New York Hotel Mail.

THE KITCHEN.

Lemon Cake.—Two cups sugar, juice and rind of one lemon; three eggs, adding one at a time, not being previously beaten; three cups flour, one-half teaspoonful of soda, piece of butter the size of an egg.

Brown Bread.—Two cups of Indian meal, one cup of flour, two cups of sweet milk, one cup of sour milk, two-thirds cup of molasses, two teaspoonfuls of soda, one teaspoonful of salt; steam three hours, or steam all day is better.

Breakfast Cake.—One cup of flour, two-thirds cup of meal, one cup of milk, one egg, one table-spoonful of butter, one table-spoonful of sugar, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda; beat well, and bake in a quick oven.

Baked Ox Tongue.—Soak the tongue well in lukewarm water for about twelve hours, scrape and trim it, stick it over with cloves (about twenty-four) and boil slowly, according to size, for two or three hours. Then take it up and brush it over with the yelks of two eggs, and sprinkle it with bread crumbs, six ounces. Next bake it to a good brown, basting it constantly with a quarter of a pound of butter. Put it on a dish and pour round it half a pint of good gravy, with a glass of wine. Serve with red-currant jelly.

Recipe for Washing.—Soak the clothes over night in clear water, or put them to boil without soaking, with the following mixture added to the water: To one quart of soft soap take one table-spoonful of kerosene oil, mix well, and to three pails of soft water take a large teacupful or half a pint of the mixture. Let them boil ten or fifteen minutes. Rinse in blued water, after rubbing them in one suds of soft water. This is good for prints, too, and will save half the labor of washing, without boiling first. Hard soap can be used instead of soft, if preferred.

Boiled Turkey.—If a boiled turkey is not well managed it will be tasteless. Choose a hen turkey. It must be well trussed and tied. Cut the legs at the first joint and draw them into the body. Fasten the small ends of the wings under the back, and tie them securely with strong twine. Sprinkle over plenty of salt and pepper and lemon juice, and put into boiling water. Boil it slowly two hours, or until quite tender. It is often served in a bed of rice with oysters; sometimes with caper sauce, celery sauce and Hollandian sauce. Pour part of the sauce over the turkey. Reserve the giblets for giblet soup. It can be stuffed or not, the same as for roasting.

Ettle Cakes.—Did you ever eat "ettle cakes?" They are handy to have this time of year when fruit is scarce, and they keep well. Take one cup of lard (or part butter), one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful salt; rub lard in some flour, same as for pie crust; mix with three-fourths cup of cold water. Then take one pound raisins, one-half cup sugar; chop fine and mix well. Now take a pinch of crust, about as much as for a thin cooky, put it down and put a teaspoonful of the raisin mixture in the center and pinch the edges up together, to cover the raisins; then roll out about the size of a cooky—the raisins will stick out some. Bake quickly. They are nice, and a change from cookies.

LEARN YOUR BUSINESS.

A young man in a leather store used to feel very impatient with his employer for keeping him year after year for three years handling hides. But he saw the use of it years after when, in an establishment of his own, he was able to tell by the touch the exact quality of the goods. It was only by the thousands of repetitions that the lesson was learned; and so it is with everything in which we acquire skill.

The half-informed, half-skilled in every business outnumber the others, dozens to one. Daniel Webster once replied to a young man who asked him if there was "any room in the legal profession:" "There is always room at the top." The better you know your business the better your chance to rise. You can gather much information by making a wise use of your eyes and ears, and perhaps be able to surprise your employer in an emergency by stepping into the next mans placeand' di scharging his duties satisfactorily. So learn your business.

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs:—therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood-purifier and strength-restorer,—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. The Illuminator.

The existence of good feeling on the part of the French Nation for the people of this country is shown by the presentation of a colossal bronze figure of Freedom holding aloft the torch of Liberty. Beauty, with usefulness, is combined in this immense work of art, as the bright, blazing torch will serve the purpose of a beacon light in the harbor of New York. There is another figure which will challenge larger praise and admiration than even the great work above referred to. It is illustrated herewith, and represents the aged and worthy St. Jacob, holding aloft in his hand that beacon which will guide aright all sailing upon the sea of life, whose waters abound with the shoals and dangerous places of sickness and disease. The light it casts is designed to show that St. Jacobs Oil is the true and trusted means of keeping the body on its proper course, and of easing and "righting" it should it be unfortunately cast upon the shoals of rheumatism or other painful ailments. Thousands of grateful ones throughout the world have proved the value and felt the good of this Great German Remedy, and are glad to recommend it to all needing the services of just such a remedy. In this connection Mr. John S. Briggs, a well known citizen of Omaha, Neb., told a newspaper man that he was terribly afflicted with an acute attack of rheumatism in his back. The disease, which had been preying upon him for years, had drawn him out of shape. He resorted to every remedy known to physicians, but found no relief until he tried St. Jacobs Oil, one bottle of which effected a complete and radical cure. Another case may justify [illegible]

SPRING FEVER

At this season everybody feels weak and out of sorts, because the system is run down, and the blood weakened. This condition is dangerous because of the liability to contract serious disease at a time when nature is less liable to throw it off; and an effective remedy, such as Brown's Iron Bitters, should be promptly used. This non-alcoholic, true tonic is unequaled as a preventive as well as curative medicine.

Brown's Iron Bitters imparts tone and strength to the muscles, makes the blood rich, clears the complexion, and by revitalizing the whole system, gives it a good foundation to withstand the strain of change of season.

Brown's Iron Bitters is beyond question the best medicine made for all diseases requiring a tonic, such as Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Weakness, Malaria, &c. For sale by all druggists.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.
GENTLEMEN: I have used Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. a very absent man, this pro- ; for his brain was so full of and quavers that he couldn't cup of coffee from a sheet of mu- d wore his wooden leg upside half the time; and whenever his Martha (who was a sort of fairy, and kept his house in order, queer old ideas straightened out) ay, "Father, the squire's daugh- doctor's daughter, is waiting ," off went the professor like a is faded dressing-gown stream- the wind, his ratty locks uncov- his sound foot, without shoe king, hopping through the streets : and then all the Blunder- would raise their hands and say , one to another:

, what a great man is the pro- !"

after a while, there found his the village a young man, with thoughtful eyes, and long, curling who unpacked his trunks and set sign, announcing that he was also. And all the neighbors, went by, used to sniff at it and guess he can't play Herr Worst- 's pieces!" And there was a crowd round the old professor's than ever.

young man, however, didn't seem it much to heart; but one evening, when his neighbor had finished the adagio movement in G double-sharp minor, he sat down to his piano; and all the Blundernarians laughed—for the first few notes were not a bit like Herr Worstanadrum's.

He heard the laugh, but he played on; and, presently, there came through the window sounds like the rustling of pines and the murmur of water, and the songs of birds, and shouts of children, and tinkling of bells; and all the Blundernarians who didn't carry handkerchiefs fell to wiping their eyes on their aprons and jacket-sleeves; and bang! went the window of the professor, who had been listening. And all that night he sulked in his easy-chair, and wouldn't speak a word to his daughter Martha when she urged him to go to bed.

After that, the squire's daughter found out what handsome eyes the young professor had, and told the doctor's daughter; and then all the Blundernarians discovered that the old professor was out of date, and shabby, and crusty, and queer, and a goose instead of a swan; and in a little while his pupils had all dropped off. And the crowd was around the young man's window, who had always something new to play; and the old man sat scowling in his easy-chair, or played Herr Worstanadrum with the loud pedal, and half suffocated Martha and himself, because he wouldn't have the windows opened.

Poor little Martha went around with her blue eyes swimming in tears, and her rosy lips quivering all the time; and whenever she passed the young man's window she used to dart such savage glances at it as, if they had been pistol balls, would certainly have made an end of him—as he always happened to be there when she went by.

So matters went on, till one evening, when Martha was almost as sulky as her father—because that day she had lost one of her two handkerchiefs—in her indignation at the professor's presuming to bow to her, the door opened, and the dark-eyed stranger came quietly in, holding her handkerchiefs as a flag of truce.

Martha reddened, and her father was so tart and crusty that she was frightened; but the young man would not go till he had heard Herr Worstanadrum's adagio—whereupon the old professor, who was flushed and angry, played it terribly out of time, made false notes, and at last got his poor old hands so entangled that he gave a terrible bang and came away, vowing that the piano was entirely out of tune.

There was quite a silence, and then the stranger rose to go; but the surly old man fancied that he was frightened at Herr Worstanadrum, and would not hear of his stirring till he played likewise.

With a deep sigh, the young man seated himself at the instrument. The professor wrinkled his face, took off his spectacles and cocked his ear critically, while Martha turned her back to hide her tears—till, hearing a great sniff behind her, she saw that her father was weeping, and making the most-terrible grimaces to hide it.

When he had finished, the old professor got up, and shut the piano without a word; and Martha, flushed and trembling, went with the stranger to the door—for she knew from her father's look that he was saying to himself that he would never play again.

On the door-step she thought to look at the handkerchief; but it was finer than any she had ever owned, and beautifully embroidered.

"Take it," she said, handing it back. "This is not mine."

"I know it," answered the young man; "but I kept yours purposely. Gold would not buy it of me." And, with a grave bow, he went away.

"What was that young jackanapes saying to you?" asked her father, when she came back.

Martha, who did not know how to deceive, told him every word.

"Oh, ho!" growled the old man, "I'll have him there. If he has stolen away my pupils, he shan't have my daughter. The next time he comes, you're not to let him in—do you hear, Martha?"

"Yes, sir," answered Martha. And, letting fall a pile of plates, broke half of them, tore her only gown in trying to save them, burned her fingers when she lighted her father's pipe, got well scolded and went crying to bed.

After that, every morning was laid on the door-steps a brace of birds, a basket of fruit, or some fine fish, always for the professor, who began to fancy that some of his old friends had at last remembered him, and chuckled mightily over them to Martha, who blushed red as a rose, but never said a word.

One morning, however, the old man—who was as curious as a woman—took it in his head to find out whether it rained fish, birds and fruit, or whether he had still a friend in Blunder; and, posting himself behind the curtains, watched the door-steps as a cat would a mouse, till, to his horror, he descried the dark-eyed young professor in the very act of depositing a superb haunch of venison.

"You scoundrel! you villain! you coward!" shrieked the old man in a fury, throwing open the window; "you wretch! you poisoner! you pettifogger! you huckster! you mummy! you——"

Here, as he could think of nothing else, he threw his wooden leg at him.

The young man picked it up, and politely handed it to Martha, who came running to the window, as by this time did also half of the Blundernarians—who, being only half awake, and hardly dressed at all, decided that the young professor had been trying to poison the old one; that he was discovered in the act of trying to elope with Martha; that the house was on fire; that the old professor was crazy; that he was drunk, and a variety of equally consistent and sensible opinions. But the truth of the matter leaking out (as it always will, little ones, no matter how deep they bury it), the Blundernarians exclaimed, with one voice, that the old professor was an idiot and an ass, and, as idiots and asses have no right to live, unanimously resolved to starve him out, by depriving Martha of the little work by which she had been able to support her father and herself. Only the minister's wife couldn't be made to see that she ought to starve a fellow creature because he was poor and cross, and between her and the dark-eyed stranger, who used to smuggle his contributions now into the kitchen, they managed to struggle on for a few months longer.

At last, one day, Martha found the dark-eyed stranger himself in the kitchen, and was going to blush and scream, but concluded to cry, when he told her that he was going away.

"I have ruined your father," he said, sorrowfully, "and he won't let me repay him; so you see I must go."

"It will do no good," answered Martha. "Some one else will come. You have taught other people too much. They will never come back to Herr Worstanadrum."

"But there is another reason," he said. "I am very unhappy. I love a little blue-eyed girl, who is my next-door neighbor, but her father hates me, and I don't think she would marry me without his consent—do you?" And he looked straight into Martha's eyes, as if she knew anything about it.

"I don't think she would," answered Martha, "if she is a good girl."

"She is very good," he said, positively; "so you see there is no hope for me, and I must go."

On which Martha whispered something in his ear—to which he said: "Do you think so?"—to which she answered: "I know so!"—on which he said: "I'll try"—and went away.

That evening the professor was quite alone, and the door was open. He was wondering what kept Martha so long, and grumbling terribly as he smoked his pipe, when in came the dark-eyed stranger.

"I came to make my peace with you," he said, mournfully. "I am going away."

"Take a seat, sir," said the professor, growing civil at once.

"I am going," he repeated, seating himself close to the old man, "for two reasons. The first is, that I love your daughter Martha, and am sure you won't let me have her; but the principal one is—Herr Worstanadrum."

"Herr Worstanadrum!" repeated the old man, opening his eyes very wide.

"Yes, I am tormented by the recollection of your superior excellence. My style of playing pleases; it is popular. Why? Because the vulgar can understand and appreciate it—just like the children like the primer better than Cicero's orations. Yours is the true school—the only fountain of excellence. But it is only great minds like yours that can comprehend the meaning of such wondrous melodies like those of Herr Worstanadrum; but to play them—ah! that is reserved for you. I have tried, and failed—"

"Really!" interrupted the old man, hugely delighted.

"Yes, really. I am continually trying to recall it, but in vain. It haunts me; it crazes me; and since I cannot bear the torture, I fly—"

But the professor was already at the long-closed piano.

"You shall not go away, my poor boy. I will play it for you every day, and perhaps you might learn it by degrees. It is not your fault, you know, if you did fail."

"Impossible," returned the young man, sadly. "You are only too good; but I cannot stay—"

"Not if I will give you Martha?" urged the old man—as eager to keep him as he had ever been to drive him away.

"That might alter the case," he said, hesitatingly. "But would you play the adagio every day?"

"I will if you like." And he did.

And the young professor, with his arm around the waist of his blue-eyed wife, smiles as the old man crashes away at "Herr Worstanadrum," saying pityingly: "Poor fellow! he can never play it."

Reader, it is not probable that there are any such cross-grained, quaint, crotchical, fog-brained old curmudgeons nowadays; but if ever you should chance to stumble on any, find out their particular "Herr Worstanadrum," and go and do likewise.

FUN AHEAD.

An Improved Congressional Record.

If Congress resolve to act upon the suggestion made by Senator Miller that the Congressional Record be issued as a weekly and sent to every family in the country, some modification ought to be made of the contents of the Record. The paper is much too heavy and dismal in its present condition to be welcomed in the ordinary American household. Perhaps it might have a puzzle department, and if so one of the first puzzles could take the shape of an inquiry how it happens that so many Congressmen get rich on $5,000 a year. The department of Answers to Correspondents could be enriched with references to letters from office-seekers, and the department of Household Economy could contain explanations of how the members frank their shirts home through the postoffice so as to get them in the family wash. As for the general contents, describing the business proceedings of the Senate and House, we recommend that these should be put into the form of verse. We should treat them, say, something in this fashion:

Mr. Hill
Introduced a bill
To give John Smith a pension.
Mr. Bayard
Talked himself tired,
But said nothing worthy of mention.

This would be succinct, musical and in a degree impressive. The youngest readers could grasp the meaning of it and it could easily be committed to memory. Or a scene in the House might be depicted in such terms as these:

A very able speech was made by Cox of Minnesota Respecting the necessity of protecting the black voter.
'Twas indignantly responded to by Smith of Alabama,
Whose abominable talk was silenced by the Speaker's hammer.
Then Atkinson of Kansas rose to make an explanation,
But was pulled down by a colleague in a state of indignation.
And Mr. Alexander, in a speech about insurance,
Taxed the patience of his hearers pretty nearly past endurance.
After which Judge Whitaker denounced the reciprocity
Treaty with Hawaii as a scandalous monstrosity.

It would be advisable of course to vary the meter as much as possible in order to prevent the monotony which would otherwise dull the interest of the reader.

After giving the proceedings in the House as above, something of a more spirited nature perhaps could be inserted into the Senate reports. Suppose, for example, the pages devoted to the Senate should lead off with something of this kind:

Then up rose Smith, of Florida, the best of the debaters,
And spoke about his measure for protecting alligators;
He showed how tourists shoot at them without regard for reason,
And asked to have it made a crime to kill them out of season.
Then Brown he moved amendment by inserting a brief clause
Compelling alligators not to operate their jaws;
But Smith he up and said of him who thought the subject comical,
That Nature, when she gave him sense, had been too economical.
And Brown, responding briefly, wished to say in this connection
That Smith in guarding reptiles had an eye to self protection.
Then Smith he flung a volume of the Message and Reports,
And Brown was laid upon the floor a good deal out of sorts.

Of course versification of the Congressional Record would require the services of a poet laureate of rather unusual powers. If Congress shall accept seriously the suggestions which we make with an earnest desire to promote the public interest, we shall venture to recommend the selection of the Sweet Singer of Michigan as the first occupant of the laureate's office.—Our Continent.

THE BARBER.

Outline Sketch of a Professional Career.

The barber, children, is of an extinct species. The hair-dresser and tonsorial artist of the present day are supposed, however, to be descendants of the barber in direct line.

The barber is a treacherous creature. He is never to be depended upon. He has been known to cut his best friends.

He is remarkably sharp in a business transaction, and will shave you if you give him a chance. In fact, shaving may be said to be his business.

The barber is a strapping fellow, and is ever ready to raise a row. I have frequently seen him take a man by the nose without the least provocation.

He always wants his hone way, and is always ready for a brush.

He has his shortcom(b)ings, to be sure, and is apt to stir up your dander; but he has a very smooth tongue, and knows how to lay on the lather.

He is generally honest in his judgments, and sincere in pooh-poohing shams and delusions; but at the same time he is given to a great deal of shampooing.

I can't say that he was ever charged with murder, but thousands of people dye in his shop yearly.

Formerly the barber was a surgeon also, and used to be paid for bleeding his customers. Nowadays he draws blood without extra charge.

The barber sees a great many affecting scenes. There is a good deal of parting going on every day in his shop.

The barber seldom uses nails when shingling, though he may use them when he comes to the scratch.

The barber is a very secretive fellow. You will find locks everywhere about his place.

He has very little recreation. Curling is his chief amusement.

He always stands well in his profession. You will generally find him at the head.

He never makes game of his work, unless hair-dressing may be considered a rare bit of pleasantry.

The barber has to stand a great deal from his customers. He does not care, however, how much cheek they display in his establishment, and the more chin they give him the better he likes it.

The barber's wife goes shopping, just like other women, though she ought to be able to get hirsuit at her husband's establishment. She probably prefers to whisker round elsewhere.

Though the barber may have no children to receive his inheritance, there are always many hairs apparent at his shop.

The barber's motto is: "Soap on, soap ever."

There are many more things I might tell you of the barber, but he is a great conversationalist, and amply able to speak for himself.—Boston Transcript.

THE LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

In a speech in favor of the bill to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service, Congressman S. S. Cox presented the following interesting statistics of the service since its establishment ten years ago:

Number of disasters reported, 1,347; value of vessels endangered, $16,083,820; value of cargoes, $8,429,167; value of property saved, $14,958,890; value of property lost, $9,853,592; number of lives imperiled, 12,259; number of lives saved, 11,864; number of persons succored, 2,610; number of days' succor afforded, 7,850.

Beside 11,864 lives saved from vessels in distress, the lives of sixteen persons were saved who were not on board vessels. Of 395 lives reported lost, 183 were on the Huron and Metropolis, the loss of the former vessel happening when stations were not open; while in the case of the latter the service was impeded by distance from the scene of the disaster.

It is only in the last five years that the operations of the Life-Saving Service have embraced the sea and gulf and part of the lake coasts of the United States. In 1871-72 its operations were confined to the coast of Long island and New Jersey.

Mr. Cox said that before the establishment of the Life-Saving Service the loss of life on the coast of New Jersey alone amounted to hundreds annually. Since its establishment 815 disasters have occurred, imperiling the lives of 2,754 persons, of whom 2,725 were saved.

AT a Sunday-school in A., the superintendent, desiring to impress on the small scholars the "Trinity," asked: "How many fathers have you?" Some answered one, others two. "Have you not another father?" asked the superintendent. "Yes," answered a small boy of 6, "grandfather." The effect can be imagined.

THOMAS and James had new suits of clothing at the same time. Thomas kept his in the wardrobe, nice and clean; but James put his right on, and wore it every day—so it became shabby after a time. Thomas' suit, on the contrary, was as good as ever when James' was worn out. When the boys' father saw the condition of his sons' clothing he straightway bought a new and nobby suit for James; but, as Thomas' suit was as good as ever, he got no new clothes. Both boys have now suits equally good, but the cut of Thomas is somewhat archaic. James says Thomas is an awful guy.—Boston Transcript.

The Shelby Democrats are working themselves up unnecessarily. The whiskey-guzzling soreheads will be set down on with perfect satisfaction to the cold-water Democrats. The Hardy-Holbrook combination is making itself ridiculous by going before the people upon such a trumped up issue. The Shelbyites can amuse themselves with unravelling the arguments, if such a thing is possible, of the too-anxious-to-get-on-the-out-side-a-little-stagger-juice combination.

It is reliably stated that the great disaffected nominated the ticket they did—the one nominated at Birmingham and endorsed at Montgomery—in order that the Democratic majority may look as astounding as possible. The aim is to bring out sufficient opposition to warrant the polling of a full Democratic vote, many of them no doubt voting the Democratic ticket themselves, and as the majority will necessarily be tremendous, they will raise a howl of fraud just before the Congressional election for the purpose of getting in a Congressman or too.

The Crops.

From all portions of the State come encouraging reports of the crops. In some counties corn enough will be raised to carry the farmers through two years. Only two counties, Dallas and Montgomery, have reported the presence of the cotton worm. The farmers have paid more attention to the raising of home supplies, this year than during any previous year since the war; and an abundant crop will make them independent, and free them from the galling pressure of debt.

The success of the farmer is cause for rejoicing. Upon his crops are all other industries dependent, and with good crops this year, we can expect a revival in the business of the country, which has not been equaled since the days when cotton was king and the planter and negro were both slaves.

Brevity.

"Brevity is the soul of wit," saith the proverb; a proverb which, for lo, these many years, has too often been preached without being practiced. Ministers of the gospel, political speakers, fourth of July and decoration day orators, are too often guilty of heedlessly disregarding the trite old proverb. A minister will preach to his congregation until, wearied out, his hearers will lose all interest in his sermon. And with the peroration he will produce long drawn out morals which none but a few amen-corner deacons ever listen to, from the fact that in most cases the greater part of his audience become so completely disgusted with hearing his monotone voice, that they are averse to accepting any of the doctrines which he seeks to inculcate, the consequence being that he is the direct cause of the failure of his own efforts to make them better men and women.

"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Any aspirant for political honors who has no more consideration for the feelings of those whom he hopes to make his constituents than to keep them listening for hours to his fifth-rate arguments as to why they should elect him to position, is a nuisance of a supreme grade, and deserves to be consigned to the category of the defeated—a political predicament in which he, no doubt, expects, by his never-ending harangues to place his opponent. Everything in this world is said to have an end except the speeches of some eloquent (?) orators. They are many who wish it otherwise, many who have suffered from its seeming truth, and who at times would like to place before such orators the little maxim: "Be brief, if you would be wise." To such: More anon.

Home Rule in Egypt.

The brief and unimportant reigns of Abbas and his uncle Said, nine years his junior, were followed by the magnificent Khedivate of Ismail, who now eats away his heart in uxorious banishment in the the walled villa at Naples. He made Cairo worthy of its name, magnificent. His aid made De Lesseps' Suez Canal a possibility. He took 176,000 of the 400,000 shares in the enterprise. He increased his tribute to the Porte from about two millions to four million dollars, and in return the Khedivate was confined to his immediate descendants and he was in other respects granted all the prerogatives of an independent King. He aspired to make Cairo the representative city of a continent which once led the world in civilization. But to accomplish this and minister to the barbaric and sensual magnificence of his personal tastes he ground his people to the earth with utterly unbearable and extortionate taxes, and even then failed to meet the interest on his debts, and, having pledged his Kingdom, the pawnbrokers closed him out. England and France, obedient to the autocrats of hard cash, who rule all rulers, deposed Ismail and set up Tewfik. He exercises as much authority as would an exhumed Egyptian mummy, and England and France rule the land of the Pharoahs by their own recognized commissioners. Colonel Arabi, who seems to possess many of the qualities which made Mehemet Ali the first dominant genius who rose in Egypt for near two thousand years, has declared war on the alien rulers, and will, if he can, establish the doctrine of "Egypt for Egyptians." The odds against him are fearful, and unless he makes quick work, the English and French troops will be upon him, and his blow for Egyptian indpendence will be broken.—Philadelphia Times.

Eutaw Whig and Observer: We regret to hear that the grass, or army worm, are eating up the young corn, peas and grass on Hon. J. T. Patton's farm, in Knoxville beat, and have probably appeared on other places.

Macon Mail: Mr. A. J. Cloud, who removed to Arkansas last winter, has returned with his family to his old settlement. He says he has seen a number of States since he went away, but none, taking all in all, that are better than Alabama.

Talladega Mountain Home: Lightning struck a stump standing close to the fence on Mrs. Barclay's farm last week, setting it on fire. Fearing that the fire would communicate with the fence the colored tenants were requested to take water and extinguish it. The superstitious creatures refused to trifle with fire from heaven, and stoutly maintained that nothing but sweet milk would put it out, and yet some of these were "educated darkeys."

Birmingham Observer: A railroad from Birmingham to Cahaba Valley is to be built at once. A party of surveyors made the initial move on Monday last, and the entire road will be ready for its rolling stock by next spring. This important enterprise will open to this section the inexhaustible iron deposits of the Cahaba country, and give a new impetus to the iron interests of this city. There has been very little talk and a great amount of work done in connection with this project, as results will prove.

Gadsden News: As Mr. S. A. Shores, living eight miles from here returned from his work on Saturday, the 8th inst., and went to the well for some water with his little girl, two years and seven month old, whom he set upon the curbing in order to let her drink out of the bucket "like papa." The curbing was rotten and gave way immediately, precipitating the little one a distance of forty feet into water five feet deep Mr. Shores immediately jumped after her—climbing back up the wall with the child in his arms. The little prattler was very slightly bruised and was not even strangled by the water, so quick was the rescue.

PUBLIC SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

In pursuance of an order of the Honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, under section 2455 of the revised statutes of the United States, we hereby make known that a public sale of valuable government land will be held at the Land Office at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1882, at 12 m., at which time will be offered the following described lands, viz:

North of base and east of the St. Stephen's meridian, in the former Greenville, now Montgomery, Alabama, Land District.

South west quarter of southeast quarter, and southwest quarter of southwest quarter of section 20, township 22 north, range 15 east.

The sale will close immediately after the offering and should any of the above lands not be purchased at the public sale, they will subsequently be regarded and treated as subject to private entry.

All of the above lands will be disposed of at not less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Prominent railroad men tell us at Chilton county is improving re rapidly than any other unty through which the South North Alabama railroad passes.

The new building being put up ar the Courthouse by Mr. John ldrige, is going up very rapidly d will be ready for occupation out the first of September.

The "Ehrman" B. B. C. of this lace, will play a match game with e Montevallo club shortly. The Ehrmans" have some good play- rs, and is composed of the second ine of the "Chilton View" club.

The barbecue at Providence Church, on last Friday, was largely attended. Addresses were made by . S. Edwards, Esq., of Clanton, ol. E. G. Walker and Walter Cary, Esq., of Montevallo. After the peaking a bounteous repast was pread, to which ample justice was one. Many thanks are due Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Vanderveer, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Curry, and others, for heir efforts to make the occasion njoyable to all. As far as we re concerned, their efforts succeed- ed admirably.

The following from the Birming- ham Iron Age, speaks for itself in regard to our county: "Mr. N. D. Sherman, of this city, handed us Monday some specimens of ores taken from his copper mines in Chilton county. The ores, Mr. Sherman informs us, are rich in silver and copper, and the vein from which they were taken five feet thick. This is only another evidence of the incalculable miner- al wealth of this favored section of Alabama."

Jemison Jettings.

Health of the community good.

Crops the best ,that have been seen in this section for years.

The Jemison Institute is again under full headway, and progressing finely under the skillful management of Prof. A. E. Burns and Miss Julia Fancher.

I will say to "Occasional" that I was not insinuating a doubt as to Verbena's brain power. I was only wondering why he did not keep us posted through the VIEW as to Verbena's grand improvements. Yes, Mr. VIEW boils my items down every week, and if he is purchasing all the stone coal that passes this station going South, to boil our items, I think he would save expenses by enlarging his paper.

Dr. J. P. Robinson, county health officer of Chilton Co., delivered an interesting health lecture at this place Saturday. Also Messrs. Edwards and Hall delivered interesting political addresses. Most of our citizens hurrah for Hall.

Miss Sudie Allen, who has been visiting friends at Brierfield, has returned home.

Mr. J. P. Allen's new dwelling is being painted, and we hear of several more buildings being built shortly.

I will close for fear of that boiling. It is to be hoped that the people of our county will realize the fact that we now have a good county paper, and give it such support as to justify enlargement at no distant day.

BIJOU.

He Was Not a Candidate.

A countryman came to town the other day in search of a lawyer in order to get advice on a few legal points. He approached a young legal friend of ours, and after getting the necessary information, and being presented with a bill, he enquired:

"Aren't you a candidate for the Legislature?"

Our young limb of the law assured him that he was not.

"Well, sir, I thought you was the candidate, and I've been waiting fur 'bout six months fur candidates to git ripe, thinkin' I'd come to town and git this little advice fur nothin'."

The literary entertainment on last Monday evening, by Rev. T. F. Thomasson was well attended and deserves more than a passing notice. Mr. Thomasson undoubtedly possesses considerable elocutionary talent, and by continued application he is in a sure way to carry the art to perfection. His humorous selections are new and he recites them with distinctness. His audience was very attentive and appreciative.

Voluntary Contributions.

The New York Herald publishes an interesting collection of evidence on the subject of "voluntary" contributions to campaign funds. It consists of the successive letters demanding money sent out during the campaign of 1880. First, in April, the poor Government clerk, with a salary, say, of $1,200, on which he has to support a wife and children, gets a letter informing him that the Congressional Committee thinks that, "under the circumstances in which the country finds itself placed," he will "esteem it both a privilege and a pleasure to make its fund a contribution, which it is hoped may not be less than $—." Having secured two per cent, of the $1,200 in this way, six months later comes a circular from Mr. Hubbell asking for "an additional one per cent." to make the "coming victory complete." Meanwhile the Republican State Committee are sending requests for "voluntary" contributions too. On August 27 they ask for "a contribution of $—(one-half before September 3)," the amount fixed being three per cent. on the salary. September 13, the clerk receives a reminder of the previous letter. October 16, he is dunned again by a third letter, and asked to send on the money "by return mail," and finally, October 27, the Secretary of the State Committee, Mr. Glidden, throws off the mask altogether, and instead of sending a letter to the clerk himself, sends it to the head of the department in which he is employed. His letter incloses a schedule of names of employes, with the amounts "yet due" opposite each name, and winds up in the following significant terms: "The total unpaid at this date and due from the employes in your office appears to be $—. Your immediate attention to this matter is very important." In this way seven per cent. is wrung out of the clerk. Seven per cent. on $1,200 is $84, or very nearly an entire month's income. The beauty of it is the pretence that the whole thing is voluntary. And this is the way the Republican party keeps in power.

Determined to Die.

LONDON, July 24.—Arabi Pasha wrote the following letter to Gladstone a few days before the bombardment of Alexandria, but Gladstone did not receive it until after the bombardment: "The Koran commands us to resist if war is waged against us. Hence England may rest assured the first gun she fires in Egypt will dissolve Egyptians from all treaties. Control will cease, property of Europeans will be confiscated, canals will be destroyed and Jehad be preached in Syria, Arabia and India. The first blow which England strikes Egypt will cause blood to flow through the breadth of Asia and Africa, the responsibility of which will be on the head of England. Egypt is still ready to be fast friends with England and keep her road to India, but she must keep within the limits of her jurisdiction. Finally England may rest assured that we are determined to die for our country.

One Argument Against Prohibition.

"Prohibition doesn't prohibit, because men sell liquor and get drunk where prohibition exists," say the friends of license.

Suppose we use the same argument in other matters; for instance.

Christianity doesn't Christianize because these are sinners in the world.

Wisdom doesn't make wise, because fools are still to be found.

Cultivation doesn't cultivate, because weeds still come up in the field.

Education doesn't educate, because it doesn't exterminate the ignorance that persists in such silly arguments as the above.

The Difference in Moustaches.

"Kiss me, darling."

She looked up at him in sweet surprise, and puckering her lips into an osculating bouquet, was enjoying his pledge of love, when she screamed;

"Ouch!"

"Is it so nice as that, darling?"

"Oh, dear, George, your moustache tickles so—it is just like a shoe-brush. My other sweetheart has such a nice silken moustache that it gives me a most exquisite feeling. But your old shoe-brush—"

He was gone.

THE PHILOSOPHER AND THE FLEA

This is the tale of the philosopher and the flea:

1. The former, having been bitten by the latter, seized and was about to dispatch his foe, when he reflected that the little insect had only acted from instinct, and was not to be blamed. Accordingly he deposited the flea on the back of a passing dog.

2. This dog was the poodle of a lady, and she was very fond of the pretty animal. On his return to the house his mistress took him upon her lap to caress him, and the flea embraced his opportunity to change his inhabit.

3. The flea, having in the course of the night engaged in active business operations, awakened the lady. Her husband was sleeping peacefully beside her, and in the silence of the chamber she heard him in his dreams whisper, with an accent of ineffable tenderness, a name! The name was that of her most intimate female friend!!

4. As soon as it was day, the outraged wife hurried to the house of her rival, and told the rival's husband of the big, big discovery she had made. He, being a man of decision, at once called out the destroyer of his household's peace and ran him through.

5. The widow, when her husband was taken home to her upon the medium of a shutter, was so terribly smitten with remorse that she precipitated herself from the fourth-story window.

6. The other lady convinced her husband that he had wronged her by entertaining any suspicions as to her fidelity, and, becoming reconciled with him, seized an early opportunity of poisoning him.

7. Inasmuch as the jurors of that country had never heard of "extenuating circumstances," and the Chief Magistrate thought that he could put a murderer to better uses than not guillotining him, the guilty woman was duly decapitated, and the sole survivors of the tragedy were the philosopher and the flea.

THE PECULIARITIES OF SMALL-POX.

It is one of the most communicable of all diseases, being both contagious and infectious; that is, it may be communicated by touching a person who has it, or by touching a garment he has worn, or an article that he has handled, or it may be carried in the air, and thus communicated to a person who never saw nor ever came very near to one afflicted with it. It may come from handling paper money; it may be brought by mail in a newspaper or letter, or in a package by express; it may be caught by a fellow-traveler on a railroad, or from a passer-by in the street, or from the casual visit of a friend. The germs of it will remain in bed-clothing, carpets, and the like, for months, and, perhaps, for years. It respects no season of the year and no spot on the earth. It visits the tropics; it has slain its millions in Mexico; it nearly depopulated Greenland; it reaches the mountain tops and breaks out in mid-ocean; it has no favored localities; the whole earth is its home. Its most frightful slaughter was in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. But in those days there were no railroads and no steam, and but little commerce, no express companies, and but little mail matter, and but very little travel in any way. In these days of ceaseless intercourse and perpetual running to and fro, if the disease were unchecked as it was then, its ravages would soon depopulate the whole civilized world; and perhaps this proposition would remain true if the word civilized were stricken out, for it is a well-established fact that the dark-skinned races are much more susceptible of it than the whites, and are also much more likely to die from its effects.

CHEMISTRY.

Some time since the director of the museum was granted leave to provide himself with apparatus and chemicals in order that he might make some experiments for the benefit of the club. Being now called upon to report progress, he came forward with his first experiment. Taking up an egg, he explained its proportions of lime, albumen and sugar, and broke it into a tin dish. He then poured in a gill of whisky, and explained that whisky was the juice of corn and was principally used to tone up the system, prevent baldness, cure lockjaw and produce pleasant dreams. He grated in a little nutmeg, and explained that the nuts couldn't grow in this country on account of the weather fooling around so much. Milk was added without comment, and the mixture well shaken and poured out in a tumbler and handed to Brother Gardner. He gulped it all down with evident relish, and remarked that he should hereafter encourage chemistry with all his might.—Lime-Kiln Club.

PROPER RESPECT.

During breakfast at the Hard-Chew-ing House, Skidmore, the star boarder, jumped up, and, with a profound bow, opened the door for the colored waiter.

"Getting very pelite, seems to me," growled old Maj. Boggs.

"It isn't politeness; it's respect for age," said Skidmore, gloomily. "Didn't you see he carried the butter in one hand and a spring chicken in the other?"

And the landlady retired to make out his bill.—Derrick Dodd.

A WOMAN'S ROMANCE IN A NUTSHELL.

He was introduced to her at a ball; she danced with him and forgot him.

She met with him again at a reception, was reintroduced, and remembered she had seen him before. Where, she did not know. Yet for some moments his arm had been around her slender waist.

At the reception she talked to him, and found him dull. She looked at him. He might be called handsome, but was awkward. When he sat down he was prone to sprawl. He stood with his head forward, and stumbled ungracefully in his walk. She flushed with annoyance, left him, and went into the conservatory with a man more to her taste.

She found him one evening at the house of a friend. She conversed easily on topics of general interest. He sat in a chair too low for him and his feet were painfully apparent. She disdainfully turned her shoulder toward him. Presently she rose to go, and dropped her handkerchief. He bent lightly forward and caught it up, almost before it touched the carpet. As an intimate friend at the house, he prepared to see her home. He arranged her cloak with eager deference, and she smiled. He trampled on her skirt as she passed out of the door, and she frowned.

They arrived at her gate; he pushed it open, took off his hat, and almost ran away.

One day she was coming home from a shopping expedition with a small parcel in her hand. He came up with her, bowed awkwardly, blushed, and asked if he might take her parcel. He did not say much, but listened in adoring silence. When he left her she laughed, and said he was intolerably stupid, yet not a bore.

Pretty soon he began to call often and attended her to the opera and theater when she would permit him. He was always near her and anxious to be of service. He was manly, and among men a favorite. He rode well, but danced indifferently. The other girls laughed at him, but he did not heed it. She danced perfectly, was talkative, daring and impulsive.

She snubbed him, and shook him off for more accomplished men.

He finally said he loved her. She laughed, said "Impossible," tormented him, neglected him, refused more eligible suitors, and finally married him and adored him for all time.

Of such is the nature of women.

THE HISTORY OF GERRYMANDERING.

It is interesting to recall the history of "gerrymandering." It began in Massachusetts, and this was the way of it: In 1811, when party feeling ran high and voters in the State were very evenly divided, the Republican-Democrats for the first time in a number of years elected the Governor and a majority of both branches of the General Court, and, to preserve their power, they rearranged the Senatorial districts and made them of irregular shape so as to give themselves a majority in as many as possible. Nothing of the kind had ever been done before, the move excited bitter opposition among the Federalists, and Eldridge Gerry, then Governor and for years a leading Democrat, came in for a great share of the denunciation. One district was made of a line of towns on the westerly and northerly sides of Essex county, forming something like an irregular letter F. The Boston Sentinel was the leading Federalist paper, and Russell, its editor, to show plainly what was being done, took a map of the county, colored the towns on it included in the peculiar district and hung it up in his office. One day Gilbert Stuart happened to see it, and, saying that it resembled some monstrous animal, took a pencil, and, with a few strokes, indicated upon it head, wings and claws, so that the new district looked like some kind of a strange dragon. "There," said he, "that will do for a salamander." "Salamander!" exclaimed Russell; "call it 'a Gerry-mander!'" And so the new proceeding found a name. This was in the spring of 1812, and at the election of that year it appeared that the first gerrymandering was effectually done for; although the Federalists elected their Governor, they got but eleven out of the forty Senators, and this while they had a handsome majority for their State ticket and actually cast 1,500 more votes for Senators than did their opponents who elected so large a majority of them. This result, however, made a great uproar, and the gerrymandering was not allowed to stand.—Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

A GEORGIA SNAKE STORY.

A Georgia woman set a hen upon thirteen eggs. A few days afterward, looking into the nest, she was surprised to find the hen missing and the eggs gone, and in their stead a huge rattlesnake comfortably coiled up. Noticing the swelled condition of his snakeship, she procured a spade and pinned his head to the ground. Then, with a rake, the tail was drawn out and fastened down to prevent wiggling. A penknife soon split the reptile from head to tail and the eggs were taken out. Being carefully washed they were placed under the same hen and eventually every one hatched out, and the chickens grew and thrived.

THE IMPENDING FATE.

An Interesting Chapter From the Life of a Prominent Bostonian.

[Boston Globe.]

The readers of this paper were more or less amazed at a most remarkable statement from one of our leading citizens which appeared in yesterday's issue. So unusual were the circumstances connected with it, and so much comment did it occasion on the street and in social circles, that a representative of this paper was commissioned to investigate its details and verify its facts. The article referred to was a statement made by Mr. B. F. Larrabee, of the New York and Boston Dispatch Express Company, whose office is on Arch street. Mr. Larrabee was found by the newspaper man in his private office, and on being questioned said:

"Well, sir, logically I have been dead, but really I am as you can see me. A little over a year ago I was taken sick. My trouble was not severe at first, and I thought it was the result of a slight cold. Somehow I felt unaccountably tired at times, although I took an abundance of sleep. Then, again, I had dull and strange pains in various parts of my body. My appetite was good one day and I had none whatever the next and my head pained me more or less much of the time. A while afterward I noticed much that was peculiar about the fluids I was passing and that a sediment, scum and a strange accumulation appeared in it. Still I did not realize that these things meant anything serious and I allowed the illness to run along until on the 28th day of October I fell prostrate while walking along Tremont street. I was carried home and did not go out of the house until the middle of December. I then went down town and attempted to attend to my business until the 13th of last January, when I was taken with a very severe relapse. My symptoms were terrible. I was fearfully bloated; I suffered severe pains in all parts of my body and it was almost impossible to get my breath. For six days I never laid down and never slept. I was constantly attended by my regular physician, Doctor Johnson, and Doctor Bowditch also came to see me nearly every day. There was no doubt that I was suffering from Bright's disease of the kidneys in its worst form and last stages, accompanied by other troubles in my liver and heart. In spite, however, of the skill of the physicians, I kept growing worse and finally they tapped my side in the vicinity of the heart, taking away forty-six ounces of water. This relieved me for the time, but I soon became as bad as before. Then the doctor gave me up entirely, declared I could not live more than twenty-four hours, and my daughter, who was residing in Paris, was telegraphed for. Still I lingered along for several weeks, far more dead than alive, but never giving up hope. One night—it was on the 20th of April, I very well remember—my attendant, who was reading the paper to me, began an article which described my disease and sufferings exactly. It told how some severe cases of Bright's disease had been cured, and so clearly and sensibly did it state the case that I determined to try the means of cure which it described. So I sent my man to the drug store, procured a bottle of the medicine, unknown to my physicians and friends, and took the first dose at 10 o'clock. At that time I was suffering intensely. I could not sleep; I had the short breaths and could scarcely get any air into my lungs. I was terribly bloated from head to foot, and the motion of my heart was irregular and painful. The next morning I was able to breathe freely; the pain began to leave me and the bloating decreased. I continued to take the medicine, and to-day, sir, I am as well as I ever was in my life, and wholly owing to the wonderful, almost miraculous power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I do not know what this medicine is made of, or anything else about it, but I know it saved my life when I was given up by the doctors and had really been dead for weeks; that it has kept me in perfect health ever since and has cured many of my friends to whom I have recommended it. There are a number of very remarkable cases in Lynn and Salem, as well as in this city, that it has cured. My recovery is so remarkable that it has excited much attention, and physicians as well as others have investigated it thoroughly. I am glad they have, for I feel that the results of such a wonderful cure should be known to the thousands in all parts of the land who are suffering from troubles of the kidneys, liver or heart, in some of their many dangerous forms."

The representative of the press thanked Mr. Larrabee for his very frank and clear statement, and was about to leave the office when a gentleman stepped up to him and inquired if he were seeking information about Mr. Larrabee's sickness and recovery. The scribe replied that he was, whereupon the gentleman said:

"And so am I, and I have come all the way from Chicago for that very purpose. Kidney troubles seem to be alarmingly increasing all over the country, and I have a very near relative who is afflicted much as Mr. Larabee was. I have been to see the physicians of whom Mr. Larrabee speaks, and I tell you, sir, it is simply wonderful."

"What did they say," asked the man of news.

"Say! why, sir, they fully confirm everything Mr. Larrabee has stated. I went to see Dr. D. A. Johnson, at 29 Worcester street. He was absent when I called and so I stepped into the Commonwealth hotel, where Mr. Larrabee was living at the time of his sickness. Messrs. Brugh & Carter are the proprietors, and I asked them about Mr. Larrabee's case. Mr. Brugh pointed to the electric annunciator and said: 'why, for weeks and weeks every time that bell rang, I said: That means the death of Mr. Larrabee. No one around the hotel ever dreamed that he would recover and when the doctors would come down from his room they would shake their heads and say there was no hope. The arrangements for the funeral were made, and his recovery was simply a miracle.'

I then called on Dr. Johnson, who said that Mr. Larrabee's case was a very remarkable one. He was his family physician, and expected his death every hour for a number of weeks, and never called to see him during that time, but he was prepared for it. The doctor said the recovery was due to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, and if he had friends, male or female, troubled with Albumen or any kidney troubles, he should certainly advise them to use this remedy. Dr. Johnson said kidney difficulties are more common than most people think, and that many symptoms which are supposed to be other diseases arise from the kidneys. He said that ladies after gestation are specially subject to albuminous troubles, which require prompt attention.

Well; I then came down and called on Dr. H. Ingersoll Bowditch on Boylston street. The old doctor was inclined to be reticent, but fully confirmed all I had previously learned. He had attended Mr. Larrabee, and supposed him beyond all hope, and he was afterwards restored, as he said, by Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

I next went to see Dr. Melville E. Webb, at the Hotel Cluny, for you see I was determined to be thorough in the matter. I found Dr. Webb a most clear-headed and well-informed gentleman, and he said:

"I know of Mr. Larrabee's case from having thoroughly investigated it as a medical director of a Life Insurance company, and it is one of the most remarkable cases I have ever met. Mr. Larrabee had all the manifestations of a complication of diseases, an in their worst forms. He had albumen and casts in the urine, and a terribly diseased liver and spleen. Indeed, he was so bad that he threw himself upon the floor, and with his head upon a hassock, struggled for breath. It was on the night when he was so bad and when all his medical advisers had long given him up that he began using Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. The next morning at 10 o'clock he was able to breathe freely, and has been ever since. I subjected him to the most thorough examination possible, after his recovery, and 'I can't find out about him.' His kidneys, liver, lungs and heart are perfectly well and sound. I can only add that from what I have seen, I would unhesitatingly recommend this remedy."

The conclusions from the statements above made which come to the newspaper man as well as the general public, must be two-fold. First, that a modern miracle of healing has been performed in our midst, and that, too, by the simplest means and one which is within the reach of every one. It should be remembered that Bright's disease is not usually a sudden complaint. Its beginnings are slight and its growth slow. The symptoms by which it may be detected are different with different persons, no two people usually having the same. This fact was manifest in the case of Mr. Larrabee, and he had no idea of the terrible complaint which had attacked him until it became fixed upon him. Secondly, testimonials of such high character and so outspoken in tone, conclusively prove the value of the remedy and its superior nature to the proprietary articles with which the public have been flooded. "The greater includes the less," and the remedy which has been proven so valuable and has saved a life after it was brought down to death's door, must unquestionably be certain in all minor troubles, which are so disastrous unless taken in time.

COMFORT BY THE WAY.

The small boy's idea of genuine comfort and happiness was to be pitched into a pond of ice cream whose shores were made of sponge cake. His misery was the absence of these pleasant substances. That boy simply represents humanity. Comfort is appreciated by contrast—we enjoy a thing in proportion to our conception of the disadvantages of our deprivation thereof. This applies to material things as well as to immaterial considerations. The icicle, whose appearance in the wintry cold and bleakness sends the shiver of discomfort through the observer, would suggest notions of the coolest comfort in hot and sultry days of the summer season. And in both seasons—that in which the icicle flourishes best and in the one wherein its absence is conspicuous—that most uncomfortable and torturing disease, rheumatism, plentifully abounds, causing pain and agony to myriads of people. And yet it need not be thus afflictive if sufferers would only use ST. JACOBS OIL, the surest, safest and speediest remedy in the whole world for the eradication and cure of rheumatism and all painful [illegible] The following from the [illegible] Courier (Ind.) [illegible] shows how some [illegible] rheumatism: "When a young husband had gone [illegible] and with fond solicitude [illegible] his little wife—'What have you for breakfast, and how's the baby?' he received the brief, practical and suggestive reply—'Buckwheat cakes and the measles.' We have the report of a case in our midst, not where measles was in the bill of fare, but where sciatic rheumatism confined Mr. J. Dawson, the well known Rochester druggist, to his room for a long period. It was stated to our reporter in the following words: 'The senior member of this firm was attacked with sciatic rheumatism about December 10th last, and for four weeks succeeding Feb. 10th, could scarcely leave his room. He used St. Jacobs Oil, and is now able to attend to his place of business, feeling not much the worse for his recent attack.' The inference is convincing. The rub which St. Jacobs Oil is having is, we say, unprecedented, and the article is rapidly displacing all other rheumatic remedies as fast as its virtue become known. [illegible] Esq., druggist, writes from Chicopee Falls, Mass., [illegible] Springfield (Mass.) [illegible] that Mr. Albert Guenther, [illegible] White Hotel, has used that remarkable remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL, for a severe case of rheumatism, and it cured him as if by magic."

Recently closed at Milan, was probably the MOST EXTRAORDINARY COLLECTION OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, old and new, ever brought together; fully illustrating the great progress which has been made and present high excellence of this department of manufacture. After exhaustive examinations, tests and comparisons, extending through a period of several months, more than 250 Awards were made of medals and diplomas, in recognition of degrees of super-excellence attained in the various departments of musical art and manufacture. For REED INSTRUMENTS, including Organs and Harmoniums of all descriptions, European and American,
THE GRAND SILVER MEDAL,
being the only highest award in this department, was conferred upon the
MASON & HAMLIN ORGANS.
Their manufacturers value this extraordinary distinction the more highly because of the importance of the occasion, especially as an INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION IN A COUNTRY SO PREEMINENTLY MUSICAL. The Mason & Hamlin Organs were honored by especial exhibition before the Royal Court by CARLO DUCCI of Rome, and warm commendation from their Majesties, the King and Queen.
At all the great WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITIONS for fourteen years these Organs have received the HIGHEST HONORS, being the only American Organs which have received such at any.
IMPROVEMENTS. During the year just closed, this Company have introduced improvements of greater value than in any similar period since the introduction of the American Organ by them, twenty years since.
ELEGANT STYLES are now received from their factories daily, surpassing in capacity and excellence anything which has before been produced, and certainly worthy to be ranked with the VERY FINEST MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS IN THE WORLD. They are in cases of solid BLACK WALNUT, MAHOGANY, ASH, EBONIZED, &c., at net cash prices, $240, $330, $360, $390, $480, $570, $840 and $900.
POPULAR STYLES, including, also, the most valuable of the recent improvements, and adapted to all uses, public and private, in plain and elegant cases, are at $22, $30, $57, $66, $72, $84, $93, $99, $108, $105, to $200, and up.
EASY PAYMENTS. These organs are sold for cash or easy payments, or will be rented until rent pays for an organ.
A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, just issued, fully describing and illustrating MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED STYLES OF ORGANS, with net PRICE LISTS and circulars, will be sent free to any one desiring them. Certainly no one should buy or rent any organ without having seen these circulars, which contain much useful information about organs.

A DROLL ADVENTURE.

[illegible] started at sunrise one morning with a pair of oxen and a cart, to Woodstock, to market. In the cart [illegible] two shotes and twenty-seven tur[illegible], which had been killed and dressed [illegible] night before.

[illegible] was early in November, and I re[illegible] that the ruts in the road were [illegible] the frost was so thick on [illegible] it would al[illegible]

[illegible] and lived in the [illegible] country, as the Province of [illegible] called. [illegible] though it [illegible] in the woods, raised large numbers of cattle, pigs [illegible] poultry. Father worked at lumbering in the winters, and at the time I am [illegible] of had already gone up the [illegible] to build a "camp" for a gang [illegible] choppers who were to begin work the [illegible] of the month. So my brother Ranse and I had the winter's wood to cut, [illegible]

[illegible] was seven miles from our place to [illegible] and for the first three miles [illegible] a cart-road. We had [illegible] that there was to be a shooting-match at Woodstock that day. Geese [illegible] to be fired at, at 6d a shot. The dis[illegible]ce was only fifteen rods, for any sort [illegible] guns that competitors might bring.

[illegible] and I, of course, took our guns, [illegible] Joe Ethridge, a neighbor from over [illegible] river, went with us. If we should [illegible] to town in time, we meant to try a [illegible]

[illegible] a mile or more, and [illegible] through a second growth [illegible] thick clumps [illegible] on each side of [illegible] road, when Ranse and I heard the [illegible] of a hedgehog, such as the [illegible] often makes in November mornings.

[illegible] who was walking a little ahead of [illegible] lookout for partridges, [illegible] "Just look at the 'quill-pigs' [illegible] across the hollow!"

[illegible] was a valley on the west side of [illegible] road. Across it, on the mountain[illegible] twenty-five or thirty rods off, the [illegible] grew thick and tall. The leaves [illegible] dropped from their branches, and [illegible] tops of the poplars we saw four [illegible] hogs gnawing at the bark.

[illegible] sun had just risen, and shone [illegible] them so that we could see the ani[illegible] very plainly.

"They're fat now," said Joe. "They're as good as geese. Let's git [illegible] and take 'em along in the cart."

We did not dare to leave the team in [illegible] road, for our cattle were a yoke of "sparked" 4-year old steers, not very [illegible] broken. Turning them partly [illegible] to a tree, Ranse chained them to [illegible] with a spare ox-chain that was in the [illegible] through the staple of the yoke.

That done, we took our guns out of [illegible] cart and ran after Joe, across the [illegible]low. He had fired at the hedgehogs [illegible]fore we reached him, and had brought [illegible]wn one great fellow. The others [illegible] in plain sight in the bare poplar [illegible]

Ranse and I soon had two more lying [illegible] our feet in the dry leaves. But the [illegible] one, which Joe now shot, lodged as [illegible] fell in the crotch of a limb, where [illegible] clung, being still alive.

Just then we heard a tremendous [illegible]se, that came from the place [illegible]ere we had hitched the steers. The [illegible]ain was rattling, and we could hear [illegible] cattle thrashing the yoke against [illegible] tree.

"They're breakin' away!" exclaimed [illegible]nse, and he shouted, "Whoa-hush! [illegible]hoa-hush!"

But the noise increased, and we heard [illegible] of the steers suddenly bawl out, [illegible]aking a queer guttural sound.

"Something's biting 'em!" cried Joe.

We each of us caught up a hedgehog by the hind legs, and, without stopping for the one in the tree, ran toward the cart as fast as we could.

The steers broke loose and were wheeling round to run for home with the cart, as we came up through the white birches and caught sight of them.

"What's that in the cart?" panted Ranse.

Through the trees I could see something that looked black, as the steers darted away.

We dashed into the road, but were too late to head them off. They had ten or a dozen rods the start, and were going as fast as they could leap. The cart was bumping and rumbling over the frozen ruts, and in it was a block creature that looked as large as a yearling steer. The animal was staggering in his endeavor to keep on his feet as the cart jounced along, and he turned round constantly in making attempts to jump out.

"It's a bear!" Joe shouted. "There's a bear in the cart!"

We ran on after the cart as nimbly as we could. There was quite a long hill to go up; but the cattle got further from us at every leap. I never saw steers run so.

"Must—er—smelt—er—ther—meat—er—the—turkeys!" panted Joe. "An'—got—in—the cart. No wonder—the steers—was scairt!"

Steers and bear got to the top of the hill a long way ahead of us, and then the cart went rumbling down on the other side.

When we reached the top they were "streaking it," as Joe said, across the sandy flat below us, and the bear was still in the cart.

"They'll haul him home!" exclaimed Ranse.

It seemed curious that the animal did not spring out but we could see him lurching from side to side and turning round, apparently afraid to jump off the cart.

Our house and barn were in plain sight from the hill. We had left the great door of the barn open that morning, propped back, so that "Thenty" could drive the sheep in toward night. She could shut the barn door, but could not open it.

She and little "Sile" were standing near the well sweep when we reached the top of the hill. They soon heard the cart coming. We saw them turn and look a moment, then they both ran into the house, and in a second mother came to the door.

The steers turned into the yard at full run. One wheel of the cart bumped over a big stone and struck against a post that held the bars, breaking it with a crash that we heard away back where we were coming down the hill.

But the bear still clung to the cart, and when mother saw it and its occupant tearing through the yard she ran into the house and shut the door.

The steers, in their blind fright, dashed on toward the barn, going over a pile of stove-wood, smashing the saw-horse, and knocking off the well-curb.

The barnyard gate was open. Rushing into it, they broke with the nigh wheel one of the gate-posts short off at the ground.

We took the shortest cut across the field, but as I jumped the fence I saw steers and cart go with the speed of a locomotive into the barn at the great door. They knocked down or jarred down the prop against the door, and it slammed to after them.

"Now we've got 'um!" exclaimed Ranse; "they're all in there together!"

In a pen at the farther end of the barn floor was an old hog with a litter of ten little pigs, and in another temporary pen, in the cattle "tie-up," were two other hogs, which we were going to kill in a day or two.

The rest of our turkeys, thirty or more, were shut up in one of the empty bins of the "hay-bay."

We rushed to the barn. I never, in all my life, heard such a noise as there was inside! Boards were being smashed. The old hogs were barking like wild boars, and one of the little pigs was going rock-ok-ok-ok-ok; the turkeys were all flying and fluttering and "quitting" and "yeaping."

Mother and Thenty had ventured out, pale as ghosts, wanting to know what, "for mercy's sake," was the matter.

"Matter enough, I should think!" said Joe.

"Well, we must go in and get 'em apart, somehow!" exclaimed Ranse, excitedly.

He got an ax, and I pulled open the small door of the "tie-up."

I had no sooner got it half open when out ran one of the fatted hogs, followed by one of the pigs. A turkey came flying out over their backs. There was such a dust that we actually couldn't see into the barn.

"Shut it up!" cried Joe, "or the bear'll be out in our faces!"

Then he and Ranse got their guns ready, and I threw open the great door.

All the turkeys came out at once.

As soon as we could see through the dust, we found that one of the steers was unyoked. He had broken through the partition into the turkey-bay. The other steer was threshing about over the cart tongue, and had knocked down both the pig pens. The little pigs were rushing this way and that, under the cart and all over the barn.

But we could not see the bear anywhere. We had supposed that he would rush out. Ranse and Joe had their guns cocked, and I was ready for him with the ax.

"Don't s'pose he's got out, do ye?" exclaimed Joe.

We ventured into the barn a little, and, happening to look up to the roof, I saw his black hide away up on one of the "great beams," where he had climbed to get out of the scrimmage.

There were the marks of his nails on one of the posts. When he saw we were looking at him, he sang out at us lustily, and then growled his very savagest.

"I'll fix him!" muttered Joe, taking aim.

"Oh no, no! Hold! Don't fire!" shouted Ranse. "It won't do. You'll have the barn all in a blaze!"

And indeed he would, for everything inside was as dry as tinder. There was hay on one side and straw on the other, mowed up almost to the beams the bear was on.

Then we stoned him, and threw sticks of firewood at him. But the creature seemed to be scared. He growled but hugged the beam desperately. There had been such a racket that he was actually terrified.

Finding there was no probability of his coming down voluntarily, we drove the steers out of the barn and shut up the pigs.

"Now, old fellow, you must take it!" exclaimed Joe.

He took a long pole off the fence, and began to punch the bear, Ranse and I standing ready to shoot him if he jumped off the beam and came out of the barn.

But he wouldn't leave his beam. Back and forth he skulked from one end of it to the other, growling and tearing at Joe's pole.

He was a big old fellow, but he did not seem to have much fight in him. At length we got so we were not at all afraid of our game. Joe declared he would have him off that beam if he had to go up and push him off.

Ranse ran and got the clothes line. We made a slip-noose at one end of it. Joe then set the long ladder against the beam, and, while Ranse pushed the bear on the other side with the pole, he climbed part way up the ladder and flung the noose over the animal's head.

I had hold of the other end of the rope and jerked it tight. The bear reared up on the beam and clawed at the noose, but couldn't get it off.

We all three caught and pulled. He hung on to the beam for dear life, with his nails, and then got his fore paws round it.

"Heave-ho!" Ranse shouted.

We surged and jerked, but couldn't start him.

The rope soon choked him, however, so badly that his tongue stuck out, and he toppled over to the under side of the beam.

But he still hung with his paws, and for some time we couldn't break his hold. At last, with a tremendous jerk, we forced him off, and he came down into the middle of the floor with a bump that shook the whole barn. While he was kicking round to get up, Joe struck him on the head with the ax, and killed him.

It was one of the largest bears that had ever been seen in our neighborhood, and weighed as much as our heaviest hog.

We did not go to Woodstock that day, and so lost the shooting-match; but, on the whole, I think we had more sport at home.

We concluded that the bear had been near the road where we left the steers—in one of the hemlock clumps, perhaps—and that the smell of the fresh meat had led him to climb into the cart to help himself.

Two or three of the turkeys were eaten, but otherwise the load was not injured.—Youth's Companion.

"MEBBE" JOE'S TRUE FEESH STORY.

Is "Old Joe the boatman" still alive and able? Old Joe, familiar to visitors on the Canadian side of the Thousand Islands, a mighty teller of mighty stories, in a tedious manner and with a French accent which lent them a charm all their own.

"Well," said Joe on one occasion, when his fares had been telling anecdotes of singular recoveries of things lost, "once there was an American young couple came here on their honeymoon—ah, she was a beauty that, 16 years—mebbe 17—mebbe 18 years old, and he was devoted to her like nothing. Well, and so those young couple hired me to take them out in my boat one evening, and that young woman she had on a diamond ring—ah, that was a beautiful ring, worth a thousand dollars—mebbe two thousand dollars, mebbe three thousand dollars. Well, and so that young woman was playing with her hand in the water—so!—mebbe five minutes, mebbe six, mebbe seven—and all at once she screamed 'My ring! My r-r-ring!' Well, and so the ring had slipped off her finger and gone down into the lake. The water was deep—thirty feet deep, mebbe forty, mebbe fifty—and so she was deestracted. My! I was sorry. I could 'ave cry. And that young fellow, her husband, but he was sorry, too! And he says he will give me five hundred dollars—mebbe six hundred, mebbe seven hundred—if I find him that rings. But what was the use, eh? Well, and so we turned the boat about, and I was rowing home—my! it would have made you sorry to see that young womans—when z-z-zing goes the fishing line I had over the stern of the boat. Well, and so I pulled in the feesh. My! that was the biggest feesh I ever caught—two feet long, mebbe two and a half, mebbe three—and when I hauled him into the boat there was a great, g-g-great lump on his side, like as mebbe if he had swallowed somethings. And that young womans—my! how excited she was. She just scr-r-reams out: 'Oh, do open those feesh—I am sure it must have swallowed my rings.' And her husband, he tried to make fun of her: but no, sare, that young womans—hello! was that a feesh jumped there?" (Pauses in his rowing and gazes eagerly in the distance.)

Omnes—"Never mind the fish; go on with the story."

Joe—"Well, and so that young womans prevailed upon her husband to buy that feesh and have me open it, no matter what it coss—a dollar, mebbe two, mebbe three—and so I take my knife and I open the feesh. Mebbe you think it was a lie, but I have lived here twenty-two years—mebbe twenty-three, mebbe twenty-four—and I never heard anything like it. Well, and so I opened that feesh, and (resting on his oars and lowering his voice to the sub-cellar of solemnity) what you think I find in the feesh?"

Omnes—"The ring! The ring!"

Joe (resuming his rowing)—"No; it was a little bit of brick!"

There was a dead silence for some moments, and then the old boatman added, deprecatingly:

"Mebbe you think it was a lie? No! that was the truth I was telling you!"

WATER.

We may judge something of the relative value of water, in the human economy, when we remember that most of the body and its solvent juices are pure water. For example, the saliva is 99 per cent. water, the gastric juice 97, the bile 87, pancreatic juice 90, blood 79, and even our bones 10, as solid as they seem. Since the Creator made us as we are, established these relations of water to the system, it is reasonable to infer that a large per cent. of alcohol combined with these solvent fluids would not increase their effectiveness. If the change of starchy foods into grape sugar, as an important step in the digestive process, demands 99 per cent. of water for its perfection, I cannot believe that an addition of 10 per cent. of alcohol would render that process any easier or more expeditious. On reaching the stomach for another change, if the Creator, in infinite wisdom, has made the gastric juice principally of water, I do not feel justified in recommending ale or porter as an aid to digestion. The same principles will equally apply to all of the remaining processes. Water is the best solvent known—more nearly universal than any other. This constitutes it the best possible drink for all living creatures.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford.

SOWING WILD OATS.

The most magnificent specimen of young manhood that I have ever known was a young fellow student named Henry Haines. As an athlete on the campus, as a scholar in the school-room, as an orator in the arena of debate, he was facile princeps, everywhere and always. We were not so much envious of him as proud of him, and we fondly fancied that there could be no height of fame or fortune too difficult for his adventurous feet to climb, and that the time would come when he would fill the world with the echo of his fame, and it would be a proud thing for any of us to declare that we had known him. A little tendency to dissipation was by some of us observable—a little dash of dare-deviltry—but this was only the wild-oat sowing which was natural to youth and genius, and which we did not doubt that after years would chasten and correct.

But the years came and the years went, and the young collegians were scattered through the world, and ever and anon would some of us wonder what could have become of Henry Haines. We looked in vain for his rising star, and listened long for his coming feet. Some time ago, for a single Sabbath, I was preaching in New York. My theme in the morning had been "The Ghost of Buried Opportunity." On my way to my hotel I discovered that I was "shadowed" by a desperate-looking wretch, whose garb, whose gait, whose battered, bloated look all unmistakably betokened the spawn of the slums. What could the villain want with me? I paused at my door, and faced about to confront him. He paused, advanced, and then huskily whispered: "Henson, do you know me?" I assured him I did not, whereupon he continued, "Do you remember Henry Haines?" "Aye, aye, well enough, well enough, but surely you are not Henry Haines?" "I am what is left of him—I am the ghost of him." I shuddered as I reached for his hand, and, gazing intently into his face, discovered still some traces of my long-lost friend, still doubly lost, though found again. I put my arm about him in brotherly embrace, and drew him to my room, and drew from his lips the sad story of his shattered life. I begged him by the old loves and unforgotten memories of better days to go back with me to my Philadelphia home, and, under new auspices and with new surroundings, to strike out for a noble destiny, which I hoped might still be possible. But, striking his clenched fist on my table, he said: "Henson, it's no use to talk to me. I'm a dead-beat, and am dead broke. I'm a burnt-out volcano, and there's nothing left of me but cinders now. I have come to New York to bury myself out of sight of all that ever loved me. I know the ropes here, and shall stay here till I rot. I live in a muskrat hole near the wharf. I shall die as I have lived, and I have lived like a dog."

In vain were my earnest protests and brotherly pleading. He tore himself from me, and went shambling off to his den by the wharf.

He had sown the wind and was reaping the whirlwind. He had sown to the flesh, and was reaping corruption. He had sown "wild oats," and the oats were now yielding a dread harvest of woe.—Rev. P. S. Henson, of Chicago.

BULLS AND BEARS.

The etymology of the term "bear" is believed to be this: When a dealer in stocks, or for that matter in merchandise, had sold more than he was capable of delivering he was naturally bare of the article, and it was naturally his interest that prices should fall in order that he should cover his engagements and be no longer bare. From the adjective, the transition to the substantive of the same sound (bear) was easy. The growing bear being thus embodied, his antitype, the bull, was not long making an appearance. It is somewhat curious to find in the popular mind a diffused notion that bulls are the more virtuous creatures. This is sometimes a fallacy. The bull is usually a speculator who proposes to gain merely by market fluctuation, and to fish in troubled waters. The real investor, for instance, is often a bear in spirit because he awaits an opportunity to buy cheaply. The cotton manufacturer who contracts to sell cloth is in spirit a bear of yarn and other materials, which he requires to buy cheaply—that is, unless he has already bought too much of such materials, in which case he has over-traded. Some amount of speculation is no doubt good, wholesome and necessary in business. It is only when the one party is much overpowered by the opposing party, that mischief results.—London News.

INSTRUCTIVE EXPERIMENTS.

It will be news to most people that ordinary gas will pass through stone work, and that the human breath can be sent through a brick wall so strongly as to deflect a candle on the other side. At the New York Academy of Sciences lately Prof. Doremus demonstrated the truth of these things. He had before him a piece of sandstone, rectangular, and four and three-quarters inches in thickness. Placing against this a tube, he passed gas from one of the street pipes against the brick. After waiting a few minutes he put a light against the other face of the sandstone and immediately a small flame sprang up, showing that the gas had gone through the substance. He then took a mass of brickwork, made of best Philadelphia brick. Against one face of this he put the tube, and at the back of it a candle. As he blew through the tube the light was plainly deflected. Very little pressure, he said, was enough to send the air or gas through. Sewage gas penetrates substances with just as much or greater ease. A water trap is perfectly useless, unless there be a ventilating pipe with it; then the water will check the gas, and the latter will naturally seek its easiest way out. The walls of hospitals, Dr. Doremus says, become saturated with disease, and the only way to cure them is to adopt the Hebraic plan and leave not one stone standing upon another. He had found chlorine gas the best disinfectant for such purposes. He had once generated three tons of this gas in a ward of Bellevue Hospital, where pyæmia was constantly occurring through the saturation of the walls with poison, and there had been a marked improvement since. The chlorine treatment, he says, should be resorted to every few months in such places.

USEFUL dentistry: "You look cheerful, Mr. Spiser?" said a friend who met the old gentleman ambling down the avenue. "Yes," said the interrogated; "I have just had a troublesome grinder pulled." And when the sympathizing gentleman asked him if it hurt him much, Seth cheerfully responded, "Not a bit; it was an organ-grinder, and a policeman pulled him."

A communication to the New York Sun, which we republish, speaks highly of Senator Morgan as a suitable head for the Democratic Presidential ticket of 1884.

A Western journal says: "One more evidence of the superiority of "newspaper men" to the rest of the world is given in the circumstance that the correspondents in Egypt of the London Times have successfully opened a line of communication with Arabi's camp, and ascertained the full extent of the weakness of the Arab chief.

Mr. Chas. P. Lane, of Athens, Ala., candidate for Attorney-General on the Independent-Greenback-Republican ticket, and Col. J. N. Carpenter, candidate for Congress in the 6th district, on the same hyphenated ticket, have been canvassing the State for the past three weeks in the interest of their very-nearly-all-name concern.

The Lucky Lottery Ticket.

An advertisement of the Louisiana lottery company is being extensively published in the daily newspapers, telling of a Mr. Irwin, of Louisville, drawing fifteen thousand dollars on a one-fith ticket which he held. This is the only advertisement of a "lucky" ticket in said lottery that has been published this year, though it is a matter of fact that every fortunate drawer of a prize has his name advertised throughout the country, by the lottery company, in order to keep up the reputation of the unrighteous concern.

This lottery is said to have as a head-piece, Mr. Charles Howard, with Gens. Beauregard and Jubal Early, as agents. It is to be much regretted that two Southern Generals should give their endorsement to such an immoral institution. Mr. John H. Stone, a lawyer of Baton Rouge, has made a statement that even the government of the State is ruled by the managers of the lottery. "The press throughout the State," says Mr. Stone, "is in large part in the pay of this miserable gambling concern. The Legislature is absolutely in its control. Every measure of legislation is pooled with the lottery question. Nothing can pass without its permission. The State Government is reeking with a moral leprosy, and the rottenness is fast killing the Democratic party in Louisiana."

Such a debasing prostitution of the Government of a State is deplored by all right-minded men. There are only a few States in which lotteries are now tolerated. And these States should be branded as cess pools to be shunned by all industrious immigrants. States in which the Legislatures are controlled by gambling houses, are not fit homes for working men. If the press of other States will do its duty by holding them up as such, a blessing will be conferred upon a large body of mankind. Such States are sowing the wind and should reap the whirlwind. Let lotteries be branded as swindles, and wiped out of existence.

I will found an Arabian empire." He has also tried to play the role of a prophet by frequently quoting the Koran and professing to have familiar interviews with the ghost of Mohammed. One day, a month ago, while on his way to the mosque, he suddenly stopped and stared wildly at the air, as if seeing a vision. Then he stamped upon the ground, and cried out that a gun was buried beneath the spot. Excavations were afterward made, and surely enough, a gun was found at a depth of several feet.

It is reported that Arabi Pasha was once a major in the New Orleans artillery and once confectioner of that city. He was then named Dumonteil. Afterward fought in the Franco-Prussian war, in which he was distinguished for bravery and won the decoration of the Legion of Honor. The next heard of him, he had joined the Egyptian army, where he had risen to a high rank and became very popular with all classes. The startling resemblance between the picture of Arabi Pasha and Dumonteil has revived a hope in the bosoms of the latter's creditors in New Orleans, of whom he left a goodly number. There is hardly a doubt that Frelinghuysen will soon be called to intervene in Egypt in behalf of these American creditors.

Alabama Views.

J. J. Hinds has been appointed U. S. Marshal for the Northern district of Alabama.

Fayette Journal: The prospect for "hog and harmony" was never so flattering in Dale.

Mr. H. C. Reynolds was shot, at Montevallo, on last Saturday evening by W. S. Cary, Esq., a lawyer of that place.

Mr. W. R. Johnson, of Lee county, made this year $1,500 worth of oats on the same land that produced $365 worth of cotton last year.

Prattville Signal: No worms reported in the cotton in this immediate section. It is to be hoped that the crop will be spared this year from devastation.

Mr. Strickland, of Bibb county, this State, died from a tick bite few days ago. In pulling off the tick, the head was left in the flesh, which so inflamed as to cause death in four days.

A thorough and heated canvass is being made of the Eighth District, and it is hoped that the speeches may all have a good effect, and that the result may be a grand victory for the Democrats. Lowe has already announced his determination to stand again for congress.

Says the Wetumpka Times: "At the last election for Governor in Alabama, Cobb, Democrat, received 134,911 votes, and Pickens, Independent Greenbacker, 43,353. Cobb's majority 91,468. Our Independent-Greenbacker readers can calculate their chances next month with the above vote as a basis."

Birmingham Iron Age: The managers of the American Iron and Steel Association have adopted a call for a general convention of all iron ore producers and iron and steel manufacturers in the United States, to meet here September 12th, to consider the duties on iron and iron ore, and prepare a report for the Tariff Commission.

Union Springs Journal: The dreaded caterpillar has put in his appearance on many farms in the prairies. The weather for several days has been most favorable for his development. It will be several weeks befor they can do much damage, and by that time a good bottom and middle crop of cotton will be made.

Iron Age: House breaking and robberies are getting to be so numerous in Birmingham of late, that the announcement of such occurrences fails to excite interest. Night before last some of the scoundrels broke into the shoe shop of Mr. Light on Second Avenue, also into the store of Mr. Webb, on Twentieth street. They bored with an auger, and the skilled workmanship exhibited by the intruders is proof conclusive that they are trained for the business. They succeeded in getting some valuable articles from both places, but must have been frightened at Mr. Light's, for they dropped the auger in his shop. This tool Mr. L. brought yesterday morning to this office where it can now be seen.

A Voice for Senator Morgan.

From the New York Sun.

To the Editor of the Sun:

According to an interview, ex-Senator Stockton appears to deplore the fact that our representatives are frequently changed. He says: "My own experience and observation make me think it is a pity that our United States Senators are changed so often." My own observation is that they are not changed often enough about these times, for the simple reason that the prominent idea of the great majority of Senators and others nowadays is solely to legislate for constituencies instead of for national affairs, and to raid the Treasury for local benefits instead of protecting it for national good. What both of the great parties need to bring them out of popular contempt and place them on a solid footing with the country is a strict constitutionalist for a leader, and as such I will mention Senator Morgan of Alabama as thoroughly able in every respect to head the ticket of 1884.

PUBLIC SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

In pursuance of an order of the Honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, under section 2455 of the revised statutes of the United States, we hereby make known that a public sale of valuable government land will be held at the Land Office at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1882, at 12 m., at which time will be offered the following described lands, viz:

North of base and east of the St. Stephen's meridian, in the former Greenville, now Montgomery, Alabama, Land District.

South west quarter of southeast quarter, and southwest quarter of southwest quarter of section 20, township 22 north, range 15 east.

The sale will close immediately after the offering and should any of the above lands not be purchased at the public sale, they will subsequently be regarded and treated as subject to private entry.

All of the above lands will be disposed of at not less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

Probate Notice.

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Chilton County.
Probate Court, July 12, 1882.

Notice is hereby given to Newton Williams, Isaac White, Thena Jones, Shelby Jones and all interested that this day came Robert J. Williams and filed his application in said court, praying for an order of sale of certain lands described in said petition as belonging to him and others as joint owners for partition or division amongst those entitled alledging that the same cannot be equitably divided or partitioned without a sale thereof. It is, therefore, ordered that the matter of such application be set for hearing on the 26th day of August, 1882, and that notice of the nature of such application be given by publication for thirty days from the filing of said petition, in The Chilton View, a newspaper published in said county, notifying all persons interested to appear before this court at the time aforesaid, and contest the same if they think proper.

One of the wealthiest business men of Cincinnati, Mr. Burkhardt, recently made an address in which he said: "I have cast my mind's eye hurriedly back over my experience in Cincinnati, and I am fully convinced that in fifteen years, with the advertising I have done, I have pushed my business to a standing that it would have taken thirty years to reach without advertising. In truth, it is doubtful if I could have at all attained the results I have without the aid of the newspapers. Certainly the great newspapers are the cheapest medium for making your trade known to the greatest number of people. Printed circulars may possibly reach a thousand persons whose names you know, your old customers. Your announcement in a leading journal will reach a hundred thousand whom you never heard of. New dealers coming into the field will see your name and business and know where to find you. Your standing advertisement is a standing notification to buyers that you are alive and there. It is a perpetual letter of introduction to your traveling salesman. The country merchant will be twice as apt to buy as if your firm name was one he had never heard of, though you were long since dead."

Qualifications.

An old lady walked into a lawyer's office in Detroit lately, when the following conversation took place:

Lady—Squire, I called to see if you would like to take this boy and make a lawyer of him.

Lawyer—The boy appears to be rather young, madam; how old is he?

Lady—Seven years, sir.

Lawyer—He is too young decidediy too young, have you no older boys?

Lady—Oh! yes; I have several, but we have concluded to make farmers of the others. I told the old man I thought this little fellow would make a first rate lawyer, so I called to see if you would take him.

Lawyer—No, madam; he is too young yet to commence the study of the profession. But why do you think this boy is better calculated for a lawyer than your other sons?

Lady—Why you see, sir, he is just seven years old to-day. When he was only five he'd lie like all nature; when he got to be six he was saucy and impudent as any critter could be, and now he'll steal anything he can lay his hands on.

If an editor omits anything he is lazy; if he smooths down the rough places, he is bribed; if he calls things by their proper names, he is not fit for the position of editor; if he does not furnish his readers with jokes, he is stupid; if he does, he is a rattle head, lacking stability; if he condemns the wrong, he is a good fellow, but lacks discretion; if he lets wrongs and injuries go unmentioned, he is a coward; if he indulges in personalities, he is a blackguard; if he does not, his paper is insipid. In short, if he edits a paper properly and sticks to truth and facts, he is a fool, and doesn't know how to edit a paper half as well as his readers could.

Beat to Death.

Our community was shocked, on Wednesday morning, by the intelligence that Mr. Robert Mullins had met his death, on the night previous, near his residence in the Yellowleaf neighborhood, by being beat to death with a club. It is not known who committed the deed, but we understand that relatives of the murdered man have suspicions as to the perpetrators, and it is to be hoped that justice will be meted them.

DISTRIBUTION OF FORCE AND THE USE SHOWMEN MAKE OF IT.

It is not generally known that force is never instantaneously communicated, and that a succession of impulses are required to communicate motion. In like manner, no force can be instantaneously arrested, and a gradual resistance to motion is necessary to make it disappear. Examples showing the gradual nature of the retardation of force are numerous. It is by the gradual or continued resistance of the air that the motion of a cannon-ball is destroyed. Now if, instead of this gradual resistance, any hard substance, as a block of granite, were opposed to the progress of the ball, it would be at once dashed asunder. We see, then, the reason that a hard substance of moderate thickness does not offer so effectual a resistance to a body moving very rapidly as a substance of a more yielding kind and of greater bulk. For example, a bale of cotton will arrest a ball which would pass through a plank, for the cotton, yielding easily, permits the force of the ball to be felt and resisted by a larger bulk, while the wood, not yielding, opposes but a small portion of its whole bulk to the force of the ball, and, therefore, does not arrest it: in other words, the momentum of the ball is communicated to a much larger quantity of matter in the cotton than in the wood. These principles afford a ready explanation of a feat which is sometimes performed. A man lies upon his back, and, having an anvil carefully placed upon his chest, allows some one to strike a heavy blow with a hammer upon the anvil, and no injury is received. Why? Because the momentum, or force, of the hammer is diffused throughout the bulk of the anvil, and then again throughout the bulk of the yielding chest. The man takes good care to have his lungs well filled with air at the moment of the blow, for this increases the bulk and elasticity of the chest, and thus promotes the diffusion of the momentum. If the blow of the hammer were received directly upon the chest, terrible injury would be done, for the force would be spent upon one small spot alone. The principles above elucidated are applied by men instinctively in their common labors and efforts. Watch a man catching bricks that are tossed to him. As he receives the bricks in his hands he lets his hands and the bricks move together a little way, so that he may gradually arrest the motion of the bricks. To do it suddenly would give him a painful lesson on momentum. So, when a man jumps from a height he does not come to the ground in a straight position. This would cause a sudden and therefore painful arrest of the motion of the whole body. To avoid this he comes to his feet with all the great joints of his body bent, so that the different portions approach the ground successively, his head having its motion arrested last.

At New Orleans during the war of 1812 the effect of the balls from the English guns was effectually neutralized by bales of cotton, where even stone would have been penetrable.

CANNIBALISM IN FIJI.

It was only people who had been killed that were considered good for food. Those who died a natural death were never eaten—invariably buried. But [illegible] islands were put altogether depopulated, owing to the number who were killed. Thus, in Namena, in the year 1851, fifty [illegible] cooked for one feast. And [illegible] men of Bau were at war with [illegible] they carried off 260 bodies, seventeen of which were piled on a canoe [illegible] to Bau, where they were received with wild joy, dragged about the town and subjected to every species of indignity ere they finally reached the ovens. Then, too, just think of the number of lives sacrificed in a country where infanticide was a recognized institution, and where widows were strangled as a matter of course! Why, on one occasion, when there had been a terrible massacre of Namena people at Viwa, and upward of 100 fishermen had been murdered and their bodies carried as bokola to the ovens at Bau, no less than eighty women were strangled to do honor to the dead, and corpses lay in every direction of the mission station! It is just thirty years since the Rev. John Watsford, writing from here, described how twenty-eight victims had been seized one day while fishing. They were brought here alive, and only stunned when put into the ovens. Some of the miserable creatures attempted to escape from the scorching bed of red-hot stones, but only to be driven back and buried in that living tomb, whence they were taken a few hours later to feast their barbarous captors. He adds that more human beings were eaten on this little isle of Bau than anywhere else in Fiji. It is very hard, indeed, to realize that the peaceful village on which I am now looking has really been the scene of such horrors as these, and that many of the gentle, kindly people around me have actually taken part in them.—At Home in Fiji—Cumming.

The Paterson (N. J.) Police Magistrate has decided that the members of the salvation army are a public nuisance, and the captain and lieutenant have been fined and warned to desist from singing and shouting on the streets.

IGNORANT OF HOUSEWIFERY.

The ignorant young lady may be a beautiful creature, graceful in her manners, pleasant in her deportment, and possessed of a sufficient stock of conversational power to intrap some poor fellow into matrimony. Under our laws there is no bureau of examination to test her qualifications for assuming the responsibilities of married life. The young man who takes her for better or worse can act as examining board at his leisure, and report at his convenience or inconvenience, as the case may be. He is likely to find that, although she may have entranced him with the fluency of her speech at party or ball, during the blissful experience of courtship, her endeavors at housekeeping are anything but blissful. When she undertakes to bake biscuits the products of her first day's work may be sold either for paving stones or baseballs. When she wrestles with cobwebs, the industrious spider gets the best of her. When she attempts to set a room to rights, she leaves it looking as if her neighbors had been holding a picnic in it.

But it is when the ignorant young lady becomes a mother that her natural lack of knowledge is most conspicuously displayed. Such a case occurred in one of the pretty villages on the Hudson river. The lady had been brought up among surroundings of luxury and wealth, and had allowed much useful information to skip past her without taking the trouble to improve it. One day it became necessary for her to give her bouncing baby boy a bath in his little tin bath-tub. She put him in the water, which was too cool for him, when, happily, her mother-in-law came into the room and told her that the child would be chilled to death unless the water was made warmer, and so, instead of adding some hot water to the cold contents of the tub, she stood the whole thing, baby and all, over the gas-stove. Presently heat had its effect. The child wriggled around in a way which showed that he was not comfortable. As it grew warmer and hotter, he set up [illegible] piercing yell. [illegible] was not alarmed by this, for since the days of Cain, the first recorded infant, it has been customary for baby boys to yell when they felt like it. But soon the heat increased so much that the baby, with one agonizing [illegible], kicked the tub over and rolled out on the floor, upsetting the gas-stove, drenching his mother with scalding water and summoning the afflicted mother-in-law to the rescue. While young Mrs. [illegible] was busy [illegible] the child [illegible] the parboiled infant and put him in a place of safety. Thus does the young woman who never learned in girlhood to become acquainted with the relations of hot water to babies and of babies to hot water. It is never too late to learn.

WHALEBONE.

The best whalebone is obtained from the Greenland whale. From the mouth of one of these monsters from 2,000 to 3,000 pounds are often taken. The manufacture of whalebone into articles of use and ornament is not so extensive as one might imagine. It is principally confined to New York and Boston, four manufactories being in the former and three in the latter. When the raw whalebone is first received at the factory the hair is cut off the slabs. They are then soaked in water until they are soft, after which they are scraped of all the gum that adheres to them. They are put in a steam box, where a workman straightens them with a knife, they are finally polished, and are then ready to be made use of for any purpose that the dresser may see fit. Whalebone is principally used nowadays in the manufacture of whips and corsets. Umbrella frames used to be made altogether of whalebone, but since its scarcity and high price, steel is mostly used for this purpose. Whalebone hats and whalebone ribbon have just come into vogue. The former look very beautiful and are comfortable on the head.

Whales, like seals, do not get time to grow, for they are slaughtered mercilessly, young and old, in the pursuit of wealth. The old ones are often killed before the young are able to take care of themselves, and the result of this cruelty is a loss of thousands and thousands of whales and seals in a year. Mankind will have to be more thoughtful in the work of slaughter if it wishes to be better compensated by these animals, and the whale must be let alone for a few years if the ladies are to have fine corsets and the gentlemen fine walking-sticks and riding-whips.

VITAL STATISTICS.

It has been calculated by a recent writer that of ten children born in Norway a little over seven reach their twentieth year; that in England and the United States of America somewhat less than seven reach that stage; that in France only five reach it, and in Ireland less than five. He tells us that in Norway, out of 10,000 born, rather more than one out of three reaches the age of 70; in England one out of four; in the United States, if both sexes be computed, less than one out of four; in France less than one out of eight, and in Ireland less than one out of eleven.—London Sanitary Record.

AN OPEN LETTER.

Some Outspoken Statements of Great Value from Parties of the Highest Standing.

When the people of America become so thoroughly aroused, and on a subject of such serious importance as the preservation of their lives and health, it is but natural that the ones who have been largely instrumental in the origin of this movement should speak frankly and directly to the people most interested. It is for this reason that we thus come before the public and make the following revelations.

Every careful observer who has sought to keep pace with the march of events has noticed the alarming increase of certain peculiar physical troubles within the past few years. These troubles have come at unexpected moments and in a most treacherous way. They have manifested themselves in [illegible] forms, but they have always [illegible] the same cause. They have not [illegible] the minor parts of the body, but [illegible] direct to the strongholds of the [illegible] of their work has usually been [illegible] it is fatal. Their treacherous [illegible] nature has often prevented [illegible] analysis of what causes them. [illegible] result, intense suffering and final [illegible] have usually ensued. The real [illegible] has been a derangement of [illegible] and all of these troubles are [illegible] symptoms of the terrible [illegible] disease, which has cast its dark [illegible] over so many homes in the land [illegible] is increasing wonderfully and continually. It is now conceded by the ablest physicians in every land and by eminent scientists the world over, that this disease [illegible] the result of blood poisoning. This [illegible] is brought about by wasted and [illegible] kidneys that permit the poison [illegible] in the blood, instead of throwing it from the system. But it is equally evident to all who have studied into the effects and have become conversant with the facts, that a disordered state of the kidneys and [illegible] produces most of the common [illegible] and pains which afflict the [illegible] race, and they can be traced to [illegible] as certainly as can Bright's [illegible]. To purify a stream we must go to [illegible] source, and to cure a disease we must [illegible]. It being true, therefore, [illegible] of all human ailments are [illegible] diseased kidneys or liver, the [illegible] way to cure these troubles is [illegible] treating the organs which cause them. How intimately the kidneys are associated with the entire system may be understood [illegible] the fact that over 1,000 ounces of [illegible] pass through them every hour, being [illegible] than 200 gallons, or nearly one ton in the [illegible] of twenty-four hours. This vast mass of living fluid is sent to every part of the body, and if the kidneys are diseased [illegible] that are in the blood are not removed, and hence pass through the veins, [illegible] in some one of its many [illegible]. The horrors which accompany [illegible] disease caused by disordered [illegible] cannot be described [illegible] the dangers surrounding [illegible] greater than the agony. [illegible] may be troubled for [illegible] without knowing the cause of the [illegible] that have attacked him. Some of [illegible] of the first stages, any one of [illegible] kidneys or liver [illegible] the back and around [illegible] headaches, dizziness, in[illegible] eyes, a coated tongue and a dry [illegible] of appetite, chilly sensations, [illegible] stomach never is in order [illegible] restless, night [illegible] inability, despondency, a [illegible] especially at night, puffing or [illegible] the eyes, etc. If any of the [illegible] are noticed about the [illegible] from the system, it shows that [illegible] liver are out of order. A [illegible] the surface an un[illegible] thickness or thinness, a very dark [illegible] sensation in [illegible] odor, a [illegible] void and inability to [illegible]

The above are a few of the hundreds of [illegible] which indicate the beginning of [illegible] of kidney or liver diff[illegible] [illegible] If these symptoms are not checked at once, [illegible] are almost certain to result in some [illegible] of the many terrible diseases of the [illegible] the symptoms [illegible] diseases may be, they [illegible] compared to the last stages [illegible] complaints. The kidneys waste away by degrees, accompanied by intense [illegible]; the heart becomes uncontrollable; [illegible] the eyesight grows [illegible] the entire system is reduced [illegible] For weeks before death [illegible] looks forward to it as a [illegible] and anything that can [illegible] even temporary help is gladly [illegible] bloating [illegible]; [illegible] becomes puffy and pallid, the [illegible] only caught in gasps, speech [illegible] finally sinks into a [illegible] to every thing [illegible] pains which are racking him, [illegible] comes by certain but slow [illegible]. There can be but one conclusion [illegible] of care and judgment [illegible] these facts, which is the [illegible] treating the disease in time and [illegible] which has been proven the [illegible]

[illegible] been our privilege to treat more and effect more cures of this terrible [illegible] ever been known before in the history of the world. The wonder[illegible] which our remedies have attained is due wholly to the fact that they have [illegible] the ones who have used them. The [illegible] and value of any remedy must rest solely on a basis of worth, and here is where our Safe Kidney and Liver Cure has found its wonderful power and success. But in this connection comes one [illegible] fact: It has always been true [illegible] articles of merit are subject to imitations. No one seeks to counterfeit the bills [illegible] bank. The productions of a [illegible] inventor or witless writer are [illegible]. It is just so with a healing [illegible]. If it possess no merit it will not be subjected to imitations. If, however, it has power and value, imitations [illegible] springing up on every side. While it is a tribute to the value of this medicine that [illegible] has imitations, still, in justice to those [illegible] suffering, we feel that all should [illegible] warned against them.

There is but one known remedy that has [illegible] been able to cure serious kidney troubles or control these great organs when [illegible] deranged and that remedy is Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. There [illegible] numerous nostrums on the market [illegible] claiming to be just as efficient and some [illegible] even claim to be the same. The test [illegible] merit, however, is in what has been accomplished, and we therefore say unhesitatingly that for all diseases of the kidneys, liver and urinary organs Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure stands alone, not only in point of excellence, but in the wonderful results it has achieved. In order to successfully avoid the purchase of spurious and injurious medicines, observe these facts.

Our remedy is put up in dark amber glass bottles, with the Safe (our trade mark) [illegible] on the back. A private proprietary [illegible] internal revenue stamp is affixed to the neck and covers the top of the cork and is of a light brown color. In the middle thereof is a Safe in outline, and on it the picture of a negro gathering herbs. If this stamp is not found on every bottle of the Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, or if there is any evidence that it has been tampered with, and if a Safe is not blown on the back of the bottle, reject the bottle at once, and insist on having a genuine one.

We are led to publish the foregoing in order that the public may know and realize just where we stand. We have always sought to keep our personality from obtruding upon the public, knowing full well that the value of our remedy was the essential thing, but the unexampled use which has been made of this medicine, and the volumes of letters we are constantly receiving demand a personal statement from us. We are justly gratified at the confidence which has been shown us, and thankful for the myriads of cures our remedy has performed, and we pledge ourselves for the future as we have endeavored in the past, to furnish the best and only valuable remedy that can control and cure all the many and terrible troubles arising from disorders of these great organs.

Sincerely,
H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Rochester, N. Y.

A MINISTER'S HEAD.

One Sunday morning, as a noted minister was riding along to meet his congregation, he came to where some small boys had mashed up a pile of rotten pumpkins and added clay enough to the pumpkins to make a stiff mortar of it, and had covered the mortar up in the form of a church steeple, and with the minister in the pulpit complete, except his head. Here the boys stood, apparently in a deep study, when the reverend gentleman, seeing their church, was led to inquire into the ideas of the boys, and asked: "Well, boys, what are you building?" They replied: "We have built a church and made the preacher, all but his head." "Well," said the minister, "why did you not put his head on?" "Well," replied one of the boys, "we did not have rotten pumpkins enough to make his head." The minister rode on.

KNOW THYSELF.

"The wisest of all sayings," said some one in the hearing of Charles Lamb Kenney, an old journalist who has just died in London, "is the old Greek maxim, 'Know thyself.'"

"Yes," said Kenney, "there's a deal of wisdom in it. 'Know thyself,' but never introduce a friend."

PERILS OF THE DEEP.

"During my trip down the River Tagus, in Spain," said Captain Boyton to a representative of this journal in a recent conversation by the sea shore, "I had to 'shoot' 105 waterfalls, the largest being about eighty-five feet, and innumerable rapids. Crossing the straits of Messina, I had three ribs broken in a fight with sharks; and coming down the Somme, a river in France, I received a charge of shot from an excited and startled huntsman. [illegible] there was a conscientious [illegible]ness about her which [illegible] her mind whenever she [illegible] duty to do so. [illegible] advantageously to [illegible] cultivated a rather less ab[illegible] manner, and so have found favor [illegible]. But, nevertheless, it so [illegible] that Mr. John Bayberry, who [illegible] himself, never took [illegible] words and occasion[illegible]. And this perhaps [illegible] she had a [illegible] serious [illegible] manner, and [illegible] on one subject.

"Not at all," returned Mr. Bayberry. "[illegible] But she is quite as wel[illegible] Meadowlands as if she were; [illegible] as her blood relations choose [illegible] existence."

Mrs. Horton flushed a little; Miss Le[illegible] [illegible], and Bess shook her curls [illegible] at Uncle John on the sly.

[illegible] same evening, Bess was sitting [illegible] back door step, peeling velvety, crimson, race-ripe peaches for supper, [illegible] Ashley Gray came along the clo[illegible] path leading from the stile [illegible] orchard, which he, as a [illegible] friend of the family, [illegible] Meadowlands, [illegible] it convenient now and then to [illegible]

"Go round to the parlor and see the [illegible]," said Bess, as she laid the last [illegible] glowing and pink-hearted, in the [illegible] dish.

"I [illegible] want to see city folks," said [illegible] man.

"[illegible] you must go this time," an[illegible] Bess, "for I must go in. I [illegible] to set the table for Aunt Peg."

So he went, and it somehow happened [illegible] next night he went without [illegible] the next night. Ah, Bess! [illegible] white pillow soaked up two [illegible]

[illegible] summer days were waning [illegible] sultry but [illegible] vague prece[illegible] autumn, odorous [illegible] of herbs, and bright [illegible] color here and [illegible] the hills, and [illegible] everywhere.

[illegible] her [illegible] against a [illegible] of the Madeira-vines [illegible] sweeping her dusk-brown [illegible]

Mr. John Bayberry stood and [illegible] her, watched her with his [illegible] brows drawn together in a [illegible] his mouth [illegible] beneath his shaggy [illegible]

"[illegible]," he said, at last, "you have [illegible] all this flirtation and tomfoolery [illegible] on between young Gray and your [illegible]"

"Yes," answered Bess.

"And do you care? Excuse me, B[illegible] but I want to know."

"[illegible] Uncle John, I don't care a [illegible]," replied Bess, lifting her head and [illegible] straight in his eyes. "I cared [illegible] [illegible]t I don't now—not a [illegible]"

[illegible] Bayberry came a little nearer her. "Bess, Bess," he said, lingering [illegible] over the name. "I have found cause lately to rejoice that you are real[illegible] no relation of mine. Can you guess why, Bess? Are you glad, too?"

She dropped her head again, answering nothing.

"Tell me," he said. "You can surely guess my meaning?"

"[illegible] what right have I—I—"

"Never mind about the right. Just tell me if you are glad. You shall not [illegible] it."

"Yes, then," she murmured, radiant[illegible] blushing; "I am glad."

Meanwhile Mrs. Horton and her [illegible] were holding a private conversation in their own room.

"Mr. Gray proposed last night, Leonie."

Mrs. Horton spoke carelessly, yet she glanced half uneasily at the young lady rocking idly by the window.

"He did."

"I hope—I suppose you refused him."

"Of course," returned Miss Leonie, carelessly. "That was only a neat flirtation. Bess is welcome to him now. I presume she will be consoled, if he is a cast off glove."

"Meadowlands is a splendid place, Leonie, and valuable."

"And Mr. Bayberry is a very handsome man."

The two ladies smiled and undestood each other perfectly.

Later Miss Leonie sauntered down to the balcony.

Bess was still standing in the shade of the Madeira-vine.

Leonie sat down upon the step and [illegible] Bess, [illegible] that she should [illegible] herself to be ceremonious.

"Don't you find your position here very trying?" asked Leonie, in her [illegible]

"Why?" queried Bess.

"O, it must be [illegible] unpleasant to be dependent on a man who is in no way related to you."

"I don't mind it a bit," said Bess, indulging in a little laugh all to herself in the Madeira shadow.

"You see, Miss Leonie," said John Bayberry, directly behind her, "Bess is soon to have the best right in the world to be dependent on me. You have often observed that we are not related; but we shall be, for Bess will be Mrs. Bayberry before the autumn wanes."

The Senses of Ants.

That ants can talk with each other in any proper sense of the term seems improbable. It would seem, for example, that one ant has no power to tell another where a store of food is to be found; she may take her friends to the place, or they may find their way by the smell of her track, but that is about all. Their sense of smell is very powerful, and no doubt it is by this they mainly recognize their friends, the denizens of the same nest. Sir John Lubbock made many special experiments on this point, experiments that cannot leave a shadow of doubt as to the power the ants have of distinguishing between friends and strangers; and with them every stranger is an enemy, at whom their first impulse is to "heave arf a brick." The evidence that ants have a sense of hearing is by no means satisfactory; if they have it must be very different from that of ours, though Sir John seems inclined to believe that they may be able to perceive sounds below or above the reach of the human organ.

That this is the case with their sight there can be no doubt from the beautiful experiments which Sir John has carried out. That they can see the colors beyond the violet end of the spectrum, colors which human beings have never seen, but which we know to exist from their chemical action, he has clearly proved. Every one knows how exquisite is the structure of an insect's eye; ants at least seem to have a double optical system, [illegible] of cyclopean eye in the center of the head, and the multiple [illegible] on each side, some of which have a thousand facets. What the special function of each set is we cannot say; but that the world as seen through the eyes of an ant presents a very different aspect from that which it [illegible] to the simple [illegible] of man, Sir John's experiments have made very clear. Socially and economically there are many differences between various kinds of ants, as there are between different races of men. Sir John believes he has detected the degrading influence of slavery among those ants addicted to what we call the inhuman practice. In some cases the slavers are so degraded as to be utterly helpless and dependent for everything on their so-called slaves, but really their masters; they cannot even move without being carried. Others, again, which probably have only recently begun the degrading practice, are not so degenerate, and really themselves work as well as their slaves. Among ants, as among men, there would seem to be different stages of civilization: "there seems to be three principal types, offering a curious analogy to the three great phases—the hunting, pastoral and agricultural stages—in the history of human development." So among the same community there seem to be great differences of social morality; among ants, as among men, there are Priests, Levites and good Samaritans; though it must be said that ants are far more attentive to the sick and wounded than bees, who rather suffer from Sir John's investigations.

We are compelled from the circumscribed range of our experience to refer to the doings of these tiny creatures in terms of our own organization. There is thus an anthropomorphism downward as well as upward, and both are probably wide of the reality; though after all, unless our senses and our reasoning powers are entirely misleading, we cannot but ascribe to our humble relations, with whom Sir John Lubbock has made us so well acquainted, some little share of that faculty which has enabled us to build our fleets, rear our cathedrals, and subdue the most potent forces of nature to our service. "When we consider the habits of ants, their social organization, their large communities, and elaborate habitations; their roadways, their possession of domestic animals, and even, in some cases of slaves, it must be admitted that they have a fair claim to rank next to man in the scale of intelligence."—London Times.

Exposed by Chloroform.

About six years ago a man by the name of Littlepage was convicted in the Henrico Circuit Court of forgery and sentenced to the penitentiary. Shortly after his sentence he appealed to the Governor for a pardon, on the grounds that he became paralyzed and could not speak. For more than a year the prisoner was not known to have uttered a word. Governor Kemper appointed a medical commission, consisting of two or three eminent medical men, to examine the prisoner. Littlepage was put under the influence of chloroform, when he laughed and talked as glib as any one. The pretended paralytic told how he had deceived the officials. Of course the Governor refused to grant the pardon, and Littlepage was sent to the penitentiary, where he served his full term.—Richmond State.

Rules for Horseback Riding.

Mounting.—Facing the near side of the horse, stand opposite his girth; take the reins in the right hand and with it grasp the pommel of the saddle, shortening the reins until you feel the mouth of the horse.

Hold the stirrup with the left hand and insert the left foot; seize a lock of the mane in the left hand, close to the crest of the neck, turning the thumb uppermost.

Rise in the stirrup, aided by both hands, until the left leg is straightened; carry over the right leg and sink into the saddle.

When the seat is obtained, release the holds upon the mane and pommel, and pass the reins into the left hand.

After the left hand has seized the mane, the horse cannot prevent the rider reaching his seat, and the rider firmly establishes himself before he withdraws the support of either hand.

The Seat.—After having reached the saddle, disengage the left foot from the stirrup. Then, bearing the weight of the body upon the buttocks, make the inner sides of the thighs, from the knee up, grasp the saddle. The body must be held erect, the shoulders thrown back and the chin drawn in, and the elbows should be carried close to the sides. The legs, from the knee down, should hang without stiffness, and the feet will, without effort, find their proper place, parallel with the body of the horse.

The length of the stirrup leather will be found when the tread of the iron strikes the heel of the boot immediately above the junction of the sole. The toes will be raised and inserted in the stirrup as far as the balls of the feet.

The stability of the seat is dependent upon the weight of the body, the balance and the grasp of the thighs. The erect seat upon the breech that we have described permits the body to make most readily those motions that are necessary for preserving the perpendicular application of the weight and for keeping the balance. The strongest hold upon the saddle possible is with the inside thighs.

There should be no pressure upon the stirrups, for this would relieve the weight, disturb the balance and loose the grip of the thighs. It is no argument in favor of riding upon the stirrups that the horsemen of the East carry their knees up to the pommel of the saddle, for the Mexicans, who are better riders, extend the leg to its full length. It is in spite of bad system that these people who live on horseback become skillful in the management of their steeds. Because a circus performer standing upon one leg keeps his horse under circumstances that would [illegible] a poor rider from keeping in his saddle it does not follow that the proper way to ride is upon one leg.

The seat having been found and the stirrups having been adjusted, no changes should be made for the divergent circumstances under which the rider will be called upon to exercise his skill. It is bad art when the principles are not suited to every emergency, and the seat that has been found to be that in which the center of gravity can best be preserved in the high airs of the manege, where the horse makes the most violent movements of the forehand and of the croup, should answer all requirements.

Hints for Ladies.—The lady should so sit upon the horse that her weight will fall perpendicularly to the back of the horse; her face directly to the front, her shoulders drawn back and her elbows held to her sides. She will permit her body from the hips upward to bend with the motions of the horse, in order that she may preserve her balance. The reins are to be held in the manner prescribed for men, the hand in front of the body and in a line with the elbow. The whip is to be carried in the right hand, with the point toward the ground. The horse should never be struck with the whip upon the head, neck or shoulder. To apply the aid upon those parts will teach him to swerve, and render him nervous at the motions of the rider. In a lady's hand the whip simply takes the place of a spur for the right side. The horns of the saddle, the superfluous one at the right side being dispensed with, should be of such length and curvatures as will suit the rider. The right leg will hold the upright horn close in the bend of the knee, by such a pressure as the action of the horse or other circumstances will dictate. The left foot will be thrust into the stirrup to the ball of the foot, and the heel will, as a rule, be carried down; but when the heel is elevated, the upper part of the left knee should find support in the side horn, and for that end the stirrup-leather will be given such a length as will permit this. By the grasp given by the elevation of the left knee from the stirrup and the embrace upon the upright horn by the right leg the rider will have as strong a seat as her strength can afford, and with a proper balance she will not be likely to find a horse that will unseat her.—Edward L. Anderson.

—The Dutch Government and people are making the greatest efforts to secure the success of their exhibition next year. Every Governor of a province has been named a Commissioner. Food Adulterations.

A glance at the possibilities which may be concealed in a cup of tea or coffee will convince the reader of the necessity of some method of determining the pure beverage, while it need cause no one to deny himself his morning or evening enjoyment. The teas of commerce are known as black and green, the latter being the favorite with most housewives. In adulterating tea foreign leaves, such as ash, plum, birch, willow, poplar and hawthorn are used. A species of lie tea is also manufactured, sometimes from the dust of the leaves, but oftener the mixture of certain metals with other leaves and a solution of starch. Mineral substances are used for artificial coloration, and to increase the stringency. Sand, quartz, turmeric, soap-stone, Prussian blue, and the like are the principal substances. Chemical analysis is, of course, the only thorough method of discovering the adulterations; but a close examination of the tea-leaves after they have been boiled for some time will show that the foreign easily separate from the genuine tea-leaves, and lye-tea reveals itself by not unfolding under boiling water. Quartz, sand, or oxides of iron reveal themselves by their gritty taste.

Coloring substances are discovered under the microscope. In roasted coffees, the main adulterations are in mixing inferior grades of berries with those of good quality. These can be detected without trouble if the purchaser will examine his purchase. In ground coffee chicory is such a favorite adulteration with the dealers that they put chicory apartments in their coffee-mills. Rye, roasted peas, wheat, corn, and beans, and other vegetables are also used. If the roasted stuff cakes when pressed between the fingers, it has been adulterated. A few pinches put in cold water will also determine its purity. The foreign substances sink to the bottom, while the coffee remains for a time on the surface. If the water becomes deeply discolored, it is another evidence. The sugar with which the coffee or tea is sweetened is an easy prey to the greed of the grocers. Glucose is used perhaps most extensively, and is manufactured expressly for the purpose. Starch, sand, chalk, gum, bone-dust, and common salt are also used. Large-grained sugars are the purest, because they are the hardest to adulterate. Cheap brown sugars should be banished everywhere. A test good enough for all practical purposes is to put the substance in clear water, and, if there is no sediment, the sugar can be considered reasonably pure. The "town pump," according to tradition, is the milkman's best friend. It causes trouble by necessitating the use of other adulterating agents, such as chalk, to whiten milk, sugar to sweeten, salt to bring out its flavor, and annatto to give it the proper tint. Milk is heavier than water, and a cork, floated with a thick wire or darning-needle, will not sink as deep in pure as in the adulterated article.

The baker is as untrustworthy as his fellows, and he will get as much water baked in his bread as possible, by mixing the dough over a hot oven, after it has been well soaked. Potatoes and rice are also used for the same purpose, and alum is worked in to neutralize damaged flour and give the bread a whiter appearance. The whiter the bread the greater the adulteration.

The methods of adulterating butter are known to all, and the less said about so greasy a subject the less will be the loss of appetite. Lard is easily detected, and the artificial coloring matter can also be told at sight. Lard and other animal fats are the main ingredients in adulterated cheese, and leaves of different herbs are used to give the much-valued green color. Detection in many cases is difficult, but to always bear in mind the fact that pure cheese is never colored will be the best guide for getting a good article. The whitest lard may be a composition of diseased animal fats of a waxy nature, and it is a good plan to have a little nitrate of mercury on hand to mix with it. If the stuff turns black the lard is impure.

In buying meat a practical familiarity with the quality and appearance of beef is the best safeguard. Immature veal is so profitable an article to the greedy dealer that it is well to pass it by altogether. A bright red, or flesh color, is the surest sign of fresh, healthy beef. When the flesh is of a deep purple tint it is an indication that the animal has died without being bled. Diseased meat betrays itself by a sickly, corpse-like smell.

Confectionery furnishes a toothsome subject, and in it the adulterer finds his richest field. A hundred varieties of cheap articles are used, glucose being the main adulterant where sweetening is wanted. Mineral substances are largely used and with a most pernicious effect. Color is an indication of adulteration. When the candy is dissolved in water, whatever is precipitated to the bottom may be set down as either mineral or insoluble starch, or some insoluble substance like chalk, or the different varieties of clay. If plaster of Paris has been used, it becomes solid when moistened with water. Vegetable or animal matter is not precipitated, and may be discovered in the water.

The failure of the bees to supply honey enough to meet the demands of the public has attracted the attention of philanthropic dealers, and they have been equal to the emergency. Delicate machinery has been invented by which even an artificial comb is made and filled with liquid sweetness in the shape of glucose mixed with a little of the honey produced by the bees. Its test is one of difficulty, and the best way is to beware of the neat glass jar bearing the trade-mark of a New York or Chicago dealer, and to buy the tin pails or common fruit-cans with the name of the producer on the vessel. Glucose itself is the cheapest of all sweets and is manufactured from corn at a profit which has caused several large manufactories to spring up.

The extensive use of tobacco has made its adulteration a profitable work for the dealers. Cheap chewing-tobacco is treated with molasses and some gritty substance and mixed with the refuse of the shop. Cheap cigars are made from inferior leaves, highly flavored, and their narcotic properties heightened by chemical processes. The smoker's or chewer's taste is the best protection against adulteration.

Most of the baking powders which flood the market are made of alum and bicarbonate of soda, with some starch or flour. There is no reliable test except by chemical analysis. Cream tartar, which is used by many in place of baking powder, under the delusion that they get a pure article, is largely adulterated with terra alba, lime and flour. Caustic potash leaves the impurity undissolved where terra alba has been used.—Chicago Times.

Late Fashion Items.

Prune de monsieur is the name of the new French shade of mauve.

The very handsome shade of red now in vogue is made odious by calling it sang de beuf.

White "Indiana" silk is a sheeny material much used for evening dress for young girls.

Black will be very fashionably worn all summer, handsome toilets of silk, satin or grenadine being profusely trimmed with jet bands, special ornaments and jetted-lace, or relieved by a bright color, as preferred.

Beautiful wash-costumes are made of sheer high-colored ecru batiste, or Saxony muslin, the skirt being trimmed with embroidered flounces and kiltings and the waist with embroidered bands and narrow flounces to match.

Jaunty-looking corsages for young girls are shown, made of tinted satin, to be worn over skirts of white surah, nuns' veiling, or French muslin, adorned with embroideries. They are high at the throat, with Marguerite sleeves reaching to the elbow. In front they are open all the way down, but laced together over a chemisette of silk-embroidered tulle, with silken cords the color of the corsage material. For older persons this style is reproduced in fabrics of velvet or moire.

The tight-fitting habit basque of Pekin, or, in other words, of satin and velvet stripe alternating, is still a garment that meets with much favor, many ladies not caring for the "independent" jacket of moire, while those of brocade, whether of silk or velvet, have been literally "done to death." The Pekin fabric, if not new, has never become so commonly worn, and has also the indubitable merit of wearing admirably.

A very handsome carriage costume is made of fawn-colored French cashmere, with pointed corsage and Watteau tunic, over and underskirt of dark fawn-colored moire, box-plaited to the waist. A long Spanish carriage cloak of fawn-colored vigogne is lined with scarlet satin, with elegant trimmings of fawn-colored and bronze chenille around the neck, and oddly-shaped sleeves. The bonnet, of golden fawn-colored straw, is trimmed with surah of a shade to match and a cluster of scarlet ostrich tips, veiled by three drooping ostrich tips of fawn color tipped with bronze.

For skirt trimmings one wide flounce headed by several small ones, two narrow knife-plaited frills, headed by a wide, falling bouillonne, and several small flounces, or the skirt covered to the knees by alternate narrow ruffles and puffings, are the favorite styles. Above these skirt trimmings—set on in whatever manner they may be—is the inevitable scarf, draped around straight a la Espagnole, or shirred in the center and arranged en panier. In very rich materials the skirt is usually plain, the only trimming consisting of a full wide garniture around the bottom, three puffings, with a fluted edge each way, a double box-plaited flounce lined with a contrasting color, or a coquille ruche, feathery and full, being three popular modes of forming this trimming.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Curing Clover.

We have had several inquiries recently as to the best way to cure clover. If cured as grass usually is the result is naturally discouraging, for by the time the stems are dry the leaves are so dry that they fall off in large quantities and are lost. On the other hand, if the curing is not sufficient, heating and souring will ensue. The proper way is to cure in the cock. After the cutting, which should be done when the heads begin to turn brown, but while most of them are green, let the clover lie long enough to become wilted, then turn it so that the lower side may become wilted, and then put it in small cocks, in which it may remain for several days. In this way the curing is effected gradually, and a great deal of the virtue preserved, which would be lost if the clover was exposed to the sun until cured. When ready to haul it into the barn turn the cocks over, and let them remain for a few hours exposed to the sun, so that the dampness next to the ground may be dried up. After this the clover may be safely mowed.

One difficulty will suggest itself in this slow way of curing—the danger of storms. To prevent damage from this source every clover grower should provide himself with hay caps. These caps are useful to cover hay, and they will prove of the utmost benefit in securing safety to curing clover.—Western Rural.

The scene of Irish crime seems to have somewhat shifted of late. In driving through the king's county or Tipperary, a few years ago, a resident would point out at every mile or two the spot where "poor So and So was shot," but to-day Galway seems to be the most murderous of counties. Three of her landlords have fallen in nine weeks, without the least prospect of the perpetrators being discovered.

There has been some doubt whether the Tariff Commission were thoroughly conversant with their duties and competent to perform the buiness entrusted to their charge. But their first official act ought to satisfy every body that they know just what they are about. Memphis Appeal: Gen. Chalmers has already commenced the canvass in the Second Mississippi district, and his speeches are a curiosity. He is trying to convince the people that he is a Democrat, Greenbacker and Republican, and before the close of the canvass he will probably attempt to show that he is a Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist. Even the stomach of an alderman will revolt at too much turtle soup, and office-seeking politicians still have some self-respect and decency. But it seems Gen. Chalmers scruples at nothing.

A man in England has eloped with his mother-in-law. His wife says that they had been very happy until her mother, who was a widow, came to live with her. Her husband's manner then changed: he became cool and offhand with her, while his manner to her mother was very affectionate. She at last made up her mind that she would speak to her mother upon the subject, but before she could find an opportunity her husband and her mother eloped together. Her mother had money, while she had none, she believed that that was the bait which had allured her husband. When advised by the magistrate to apply to the parish authorities to make her husband support her she said she would rather starve than do that.

The State Election.

A much lighter vote was cast than at the last State election. As a matter of course, the Democracy carries the State by a large majority, estimated by the Montgomery Advertiser at 50,000. Georgia Republicans.

ATLANTA, Aug. 2.—The State Republican Convention was called to order to-day by W. A. Pledger, Chairman of the State Central Committee. There were about 180 delegates present, about 100 having gone into another convention, headed by the Executive Committee and certain white Republicans known as the "Georgia syndicate," among them being Gen. Longstreet and Col. H. P. Farrow. Nothing of consequence was done beyond the appointment of committees. Pledger was arrested at the instigation of the opposition ten minutes before the time to call the convention to order on account of a row last night, and gave bond for his appearance. The convention meets again to-morrow.

Double and Twisted.

A laughable circumstance once took place upon a trial in Lancashire, where the Rev. Mr. Wood was examined as a witness. Upon giving his name, Ottiwell Wood, the Judge addressing the reverend person, said: "Pray, Mr. Wood, how do you spell your name?" The old gentleman replied:

"O double T, I double U, E double L, double U, double O, D."

Upon which the astonished lawyer laid down his pen, saying it was the most extraordinary name he had ever met in his life, and after two or three attempts, declared he was unable to record it. The court was convulsed with laughter.

All's Well that Ends Well.

Buena Vista in Ohio, has its idyl. Two or three years ago, a Mr. Farney took charge of the High School there. One of his pupils was Miss Woolfton and almost instantly teacher and pupil fell in love and became engaged. Old Mr. Woolftan proved a Wolf indeed, and refused to consent to their union. Farney resigned the school, but before he left town he called, with the Woolfton consent for the last interview with the beautiful brunette. At his request she sang the sadful song of Burns. "Had we never loved so kindly, had we never loved so blindly," they wouln't have come to grief. Then Mr. Farney went away in the darkness and tears, and three days afterward his body was found in the Ohio river six miles above Cincinnatti, and buried. The girl was inconsolable, but last June she married a gentleman who consented to take her with the perfect understanding that she did not, would not and should not love him. In December the husband was killed in a railroad accident on the Cincinnatti Southern near Lexington.

The widow withdrew entirely from society, but in March a gentleman presented himself for acceptance, and in a twinkling was accepted. It was Mr. Farney, who was not dead, and never had been, the man drowned above Cincinnatti being another party altogether, whose identity will never be known; and when the June roses bloom again the wedding bells of Buen Vista will break into joyous peals once more in behalf of the Wolfton girl.

"There is only one State in the United States, and only one representative in Congress that has no interest in the River and Harbor bill," said Representative Cassidy of Nevada. "The State," he continued, "is Nevada, and I am the representative. We haven't got a river or a creek even, in the entire State of Nevada. I did not like the idea of our State getting left in this combination affair, and hunted up and down the mountains, but could not find a bit of water we wanted to improve. It is a cold day when Nevada is left, but we got the go-by in this bill. Still there will be some money left after this bill is passed, and I'll make a big pull to get some of it for a public building at Carson City, which we need very much. This haul on the Treasury," continued Mr. Cassidy, "reminds me of an occurrence in the early days of California. The Legislature had been in session the allotted time, and was about to adjourn. Everybody had got his bill and appropriation through, but just before the motion to adjourn was put a member rose to a 'question of privilege.' 'What is it?' asked the Speaker. 'Mr. Speaker,' answered the member, 'I ask of you as a question of privilege, now that all the bills and drains and hauls have got through, how much money is left in the Treasury?' The Speaker made a little calculation, and answered: 'About $100,000.' 'Then,' said the member, 'I move to rake her.' In the raking in this case, I want to get money enough to put up one public building in Carson City."

Bravery of the Egyptians.

London Daily News.

ALEXANDRIA, July 12.—The truth is the Egyptians fought much better than was at all expected. They have well earned the honor of being the first to face throughout a long day the most tremendous artillery fire ever opened in any warfare. Nor can it be said that ignorance made them bold, for the first few rounds from our heavy guns produced effects positively frightful to witness even from a point of safety, while to have stood under such avalanches of iron without flinching proves the Egyptians to have some good stuff among them.

If the Egyptians oppose our troops with the same gallantry with which they fought their four last guns, our soldiers will have their work cut out for them before they reach Cairo. With the tremendous fire of four ironclads concentrated upon them, with the forts crumbling in ruins among them, their gunners yet sent shot after shot back through the storm of shell and bullets for more than an hour. Sir Beauchamp Seymour himself expressed his sense of relief when at last it was evident that the guns were silenced, and the unequal and heroic contest at an end.

A New Hampshire toad rolls himself in meal to attract flies. In this way he gets flies for his meal.

PUBLIC SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

In pursuance of an order of the Honorable Commissioner of the General Land Office, under section 2455 of the revised statutes of the United States, we hereby make known that a public sale of valuable government land will be held at the Land Office at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, on Tuesday, the 29th day of August, 1882, at 12 m., at which time will be offered the following described lands, viz:

North of base and east of the St. Stephen's meridian, in the former Greenville, now Montgomery, Alabama, Land District.

South west quarter of southeast quarter, and southwest quarter of southwest quarter of section 20, township 22 north, range 15 east.

The sale will close immediately after the offering and should any of the above lands not be purchased at the public sale, they will subsequently be regarded and treated as subject to private entry.

All of the above lands will be disposed of at not less than one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre.

What is the matter with you, "Rufus?" Have you forgotten the important fact that you are Calera's correspondent to the "View"? Wake up and let us hear from you.

Rev. I. U. Wilkes preached an interesting sermon at this place, the fifth Sunday in July.

We occasionally see the "View" man in Jemison. But he generally goes off as suddenly as he comes, and we don't know whose ahead.

Maplesville Dots.

A few of our citizens went to Columbiana on the 4th inst.

The barbecue at Callierville, the 5th inst., was well attended. Capt. John F. Burns and Messrs. Edwards and Foshee were the speakers. A match game of base ball was played by the Maplesville and Callierville clubs, the score stood 21 for Maplesville and 1 for Callierville. Had justice been done the defeated club the result would have been far different.

There is talk of a Sunday School being "organized." "Bijou" thinks there are organs enough here to do it.

The Killing.

On last Thursday morning, Mr. R. M. Goodgame was arrested, charged with the killing of Mr. Robert Mullins. The preliminary examination began on Friday morning, and closed yesterday. Sixteen witnesses for the prosecution were examined, and only one witness for the defence. After the hearing of the testimony, and the arguments of counsel, the prisoner was committed to jail without bail, to be tried at the next term of the circuit court.

Camp Meeting.

The Clanton Camp Meeting will commence on Wednesday evening, Sept. 6th, and will be conducted on the self-supporting plan. Several families will camp on the ground, and persons who cannot tent are invited to attend and give assistance in making the meeting a success. Ministerial aid is solicited. Provision will be made to take care of ministers.

Presbyterian Church Services at Verbena

Will be held in the new hall over Brooks' store, on Sunday, the 13th of August, at 11 a. m., conducted by Rev. Dr. Petrie, of Montgomery, and Rev. Mr. Petrie, of Charlottsville, Va. The attendance of the citizens of Verbena and vicinity, is cordially invited. The presence also of friends from Montgomery, Mountain Creek, Cooper's Station and Clanton, will be most welcome.

One of the mysterious "brain-waves" on which so much conjecture has lately been expended rolled through space from Egypt to England on July 18. On the evening of that day a young man living at Devonport called upon the editor of the Western Daily Mercury, at Plymouth and asked if any telegram had been received giving the names of Englishmen killed that day in Alexandria. He said that during the afternoon the mother and wife of a petty officer named Revington, serving in Alexandria, had what they regarded as a "token of his death." They were sitting together in their house talking and working, when they heard the voice of the absent son and husband say "Mother!" three times. Nothing had been heard about Revington at the newspaper office, but on Wednesday the relatives received a telegram from the Admiralty stating that he was shot in the streets of Alexandria on Tuesday while serving on police duty.

"It is high time for the Republican party to take warning," says a Massachusetts paper. True. It has taken pretty much everything else.

Mr. Hubbell, it is presumed, will send the river and harbor bill a circular.

Thanks.

The nicest present that the VIEW office has yet received came from Mrs. T. M. Ternan, on Monday, in the shape of a basket of delicious grapes. Such presents always stir the editorial heart with gladness, and the "devil" says he hasn't had such a treat in many a day.

An enthusiastic Briton: First John Bull. "Hadmiral Seymour's the boy! Hi wouldn't give much for Harabi when the Hadmiral's done with 'im!" Second J. B. "Them's the very words Hi said meself this hevening. Hi 'ope the Hadmiral will bring 'ome the 'arem!"

The scene of Irish crime seems to have somewhat shifted of late. In driving through the king's county or Tipperary, a few years ago, a resident would point out at every mile or two the spot where "poor So and So was shot," but to-day Galway seems to be the most murderous of counties. Three of her landlords have fallen in nine weeks, without the least prospect of the perpetrators being discovered.

There has been some doubt whether the Tariff Commission were thoroughly conversant with their duties and competent to perform the buiness entrusted to their charge. But their first official act ought to satisfy every body that they know just what they are about. They have established themselves at Long Branch for a month and have gone to work in the real old orthodox way. Who ever heard of a well-regulated commission that didn't go to a watering place to perform its arduous duties.

Memphis Appeal: Gen. Chalmers has already commenced the canvass in the Second Mississippi district, and his speeches are a curiosity. He is trying to convince the people that he is a Democrat, Greenbacker and Republican, and before the close of the canvass he will probably attempt to show that he is a Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist. Even the stomach of an alderman will revolt at too much turtle soup, and office-seeking politicians still have some self-respect and decency. But it seems Gen. Chalmers scruples at nothing.

A man in England has eloped with his mother-in-law. His wife says that they had been very happy until her mother, who was a widow, came to live with her. Her husband's manner then changed: he became cool and offhand with her, while his manner to her mother was very affectionate. She at last made up her mind that she would speak to her mother upon the subject, but before she could find an opportunity her husband and her mother eloped together. Her mother had money, while she had none, she believed that that was the bait which had allured her husband. When advised by the magistrate to apply to the parish authorities to make her husband support her she said she would rather starve than do that.

The State Election.

A much lighter vote was cast than at the last State election. As a matter of course, the Democracy carries the State by a large majority, estimated by the Montgomery Advertiser at 50,000. Several counties in the eighth district, give the mongrel Greenback ticket majorities. The same ticket carries Elmore county by 125 majority, and Coosa county is reported close. The counties so far heard from are:

Autauga, Democratic majority 500.

Barbour, Democratic majority 2,500.

Bullock, Democratic majority 1,000.

Chambers, Democratic majority 750.

Conecuh, Democratic majority is small, about 300.

Dallas, Democratic majority with three precincts to hear from, 2,498. No opposition to the Democratic Legislative nominees.

Etowah gives O'Neal 1,929, and Sheffield 628. Independent candidate for Legislature elected by a small majority.

Elmore, Sheffield's majority, 125, and Goree beats Lary, Democrat, for the Legislature by 94.

Escambia, Democratic majority 250.

Lawrence, Independent majority 250.

Lee, Democratic majority 1,400.

Limestone, State Democratic ticket carries county by 150. Independent Legislative candidates elected by small majorities.

Lowndes, Democratic majority 2,000.

Madison, Independent majority 500.

Jefferson, Democratic majority 300.

Marengo, Democratic majority small.

Montgomery, Democratic majority 2,500.

Morgan, Democratic majority 20.

Pike, Democratic majority 1,330.

Russell, Democratic majority 1,158.

Shelby, Democratic majority 600.

Talladega, Democratie majority 150.

Tallapoosa, Democratic majority 2,000.

Tuskaloosa, Democratic majority 1,200.

The Vote for Representative.

We publish the vote for representative only, as the vote on the State ticket has not been definitely ascertained. We give the vote for each candidate by boxes. The total vote is 1,164. Edwards receiving 551, Foshee 380, and Hall 233. Edwards' plurality, 171.

Georgia Republicans.

ATLANTA, Aug. 2.—The State Republican Convention was called to order to-day by W. A. Pledger, Chairman of the State Central Committee. There were about 180 delegates present, about 100 having gone into another convention, headed by the Executive Committee and certain white Republicans known as the "Georgia syndicate," among them being Gen. Longstreet and Col. H. P. Farrow. Nothing of consequence was done beyond the appointment of committees. Pledger was arrested at the instigation of the opposition ten minutes before the time to call the convention to order on account of a row last night, and gave bond for his appearance. The convention meets again to-morrow.

Double and Twisted.

A laughable circumstance once took place upon a trial in Lancashire, where the Rev. Mr. Wood was examined as a witness. Upon giving his name, Ottiwell Wood, the Judge addressing the reverend person, said: "Pray, Mr. Wood, how do you spell your name?" The old gentleman replied:

"O double T, I double U, E double L, double U, double O, D."

Upon which the astonished lawyer laid down his pen, saying it was the most extraordinary name he had ever met in his life, and after two or three attempts, declared he was unable to record it. The court was convulsed with laughter.

All's Well that Ends Well.

Buena Vista in Ohio, has its idyl. Two or three years ago, a Mr. Farney took charge of the High School there. One of his pupils was Miss Woolfton and almost instantly teacher and pupil fell in love and became engaged. Old Mr. Woolftan proved a Wolf indeed, and refused to consent to their union. Farney resigned the school, but before he left town he called, with the Woolfton consent for the last interview with the beautiful brunette. At his request she sang the sadful song of Burns. "Had we never loved so kindly, had we never loved so blindly," they wouln't have come to grief. Then Mr. Farney went away in the darkness and tears, and three days afterward his body was found in the Ohio river six miles above Cincinnatti, and buried. The girl was inconsolable, but last June she married a gentleman who consented to take her with the perfect understanding that she did not, would not and should not love him. In December the husband was killed in a railroad accident on the Cincinnati Southern near Lexington.

The widow withdrew entirely from society, but in March a gentleman presented himself for acceptance, and in a twinkling was accepted. It was Mr. Farney, who was not dead, and never had been, the man drowned above Cincinnatti being another party altogether, whose identity will never be known; and when the June roses bloom again the wedding bells of Buen Vista will break into joyous peals once more in behalf of the Wolfton girl.

"There is only one State in the United States, and only one representative in Congress that has no interest in the River and Harbor bill," said Representative Cassidy of Nevada. "The State," he continued, "is Nevada, and I am the representative. We haven't got a river or a creek even, in the entire State of Nevada. I did not like the idea of our State getting left in this combination affair, and hunted up and down the mountains, but could not find a bit of water we wanted to improve. It is a cold day when Nevada is left, but we got the go-by in this bill. Still there will be some money left after this bill is passed, and I'll make a big pull to get some of it for a public building at Carson City, which we need very much. This haul on the Treasury," continued Mr. Cassidy, "reminds me of an occurrence in the early days of California. The Legislature had been in session the allotted time, and was about to adjourn. Everybody had got his bill and appropriation through, but just before the motion to adjourn was put a member rose to a 'question of privilege.' 'What is it?' asked the Speaker. 'Mr. Speaker,' answered the member, 'I ask of you as a question of privilege, now that all the bills and drains and hauls have got through, how much money is left in the Treasury?' The Speaker made a little calculation, and answered: 'About $100,000.' 'Then,' said the member, 'I move to rake her.' In the raking in this case, I want to get money enough to put up one public building in Carson City."

Bravery of the Egyptians.

London Daily News.

ALEXANDRIA, July 12.—The truth is the Egyptians fought much better than was at all expected. They have well earned the honor of being the first to face throughout a long day the most tremendous artillery fire ever opened in any warfare. Nor can it be said that ignorance made them bold, for the first few rounds from our heavy guns produced effects positively frightful to witness even from a point of safety, while to have stood under such avalanches of iron without flinching proves the Egyptians to have some good stuff among them.

If the Egyptians oppose our troops with the same gallantry with which they fought their four last guns, our soldiers will have their work cut out for them before they reach Cairo. With the tremendous fire of four ironclads concentrated upon them, with the forts crumbling in ruins among them, their gunners yet sent shot after shot back through the storm of shell and bullets for more than an hour. Sir Beauchamp Seymour himself expressed his sense of relief when at last it was evident that the guns were silenced, and the unequal and heroic contest at an end.

One of the mysterious "brain-waves" on which so much conjecture has lately been expended rolled through space from Egypt to England on July 18. On the evening of that day a young man living at Devonport called upon the editor of the Western Daily Mercury, at Plymouth and asked if any telegram had been received giving the names of Englishmen killed that day in Alexandria. He said that during the afternoon the mother and wife of a petty officer named Revington, serving in Alexandria, had what they regarded as a "token of his death." They were sitting together in their house talking and working, when they heard the voice of the absent son and husband say "Mother!" three times. Nothing had been heard about Revington at the newspaper office, but on Wednesday the relatives received a telegram from the Admiralty stating that he was shot in the streets of Alexandria on Tuesday while serving on police duty.

"It is high time for the Republican party to take warning," says a Massachusetts paper. True. It has taken pretty much everything else.

Mr. Hubbell, it is presumed, will send the river and harbor bill a circular.

Thanks.

The nicest present that the VIEW office has yet received came from Mrs. T. M. Ternan, on Monday, in the shape of a basket of delicious grapes. Such presents always stir the editorial heart with gladness, and the "devil" says he hasn't had such a treat in many a day.

A Corner in Coffins.

Once, in a certain mining town in Nevada, a man died. It was an isolated town, and its people had to procure their supplies from a distance. The man died because, among other reasons, he could not postpone it.

The brother of the dead man ordered a handsome coffin for the occasion. He ordered it of an undertaker named Hotchkiss. The mother-in-law of the deceased, not knowing this, ordered a coffin, too—a cheap one. She ordered it of Sudberry, another undertaker.

Hotchkiss came, measured the corpse, and withdrew. Shortly afterward Sudberry appeared. He took the measure of the remains, too, the attendants supposing that he was in some way connected with the other undertaker.

In the afternoon Hotchkiss came with his coffin. It fitted like a glove. Just as he was giving the finishing touches, and making the corpse feel comfortable, Sudberry arrived with his coffin. They looked at each other. The latter saw that the former had got ahead of him; but that was not all. Hotchkiss' coffin was not only a very handsome one, but he arranged things so that the corpse looked like it was proud of being dead. Its appearance cheered grief-stricken friends and relatives. They were elated. Sudberry's coffin was cheap and coarse—and it was empty.

They had words. Sudberry blurted out:

"You've taken a mean, sneakin' advantage of me."

"Coffin was ordered of me in a reg'lar way," returned Hotchkiss.

"I'd like to furnish a coffin to bury you in," continued Sudberry.

"I'd rather live forever than to be buried in one of your old cheap coffins."

"I'll cut down the price of coffins until you'll have to pack your blankets out of town."

"Cut away."

He did cut down prices so low that he got all of Hotchkiss's business. Then Hotchkiss cut below Sudberry's prices. It was getting cheaper to die than to live. Several availed themselves of the reduced rates. Old Gudsey, who, as a matter of economy, ate only one meal a day, took this occasion to get off and avoid the expense of even one meal a day.

Sudberry cut again. Hotchkiss met it. Then the former began to pay a dollar for the privilege of undertaking a corpse. His business livened up. Teddy O'Flynn, who had a partner in a bootblack stand that he could not get along with, availed himself of this opportunity to dissolve the partnership and make a dollar. His partner died very unnaturally. The increase of the death rate of the town was very noticeable. A good many people seized the occasion to get rid of their enemies and turn an honest dollar.

Hotchkiss, too, began to offer a reward of $1 a corpse and a drink of whisky thrown in. The next morning Rattlesnake Bill, a desperate character of the town, stopped before Hotchkiss's shop with four dead Chinamen in a wagon. He wanted $4 and the drinks. The undertaker objected to taking the four Chinamen. Bill told him he could take them or be dumped dead in with them and go over to Sudberry's. Hotchkiss took the four Chinamen. Bill took the four drinks. Hotchkiss had cut the prices as far as he could. He had a large family dependent upon him. Sudberry had no family—no family at the time. He had previously buried the several members of his family, as it came right in his line, and he did it at first cost. The former approached the latter to see if they could not agree to restore old prices. Sudberry would not entertain any such proposition. Said he would sell. Hotchkiss bought.

Then, to retrieve his losses, he put up coffins to exorbitant prices. He knew, if anyone else set up in the undertaking business weeks would elapse before his coffins arrived. There was a great falling off in the mortality that had prevailed. None but the wealthy could afford to die—that is, to die decently. There was a great deal of dissatisfaction. People expostulated with Hotchkiss. They said it was perfectly legitmate to make a corner in other articles of trade, but to make it in coffins was sacrilegious and ought not to be endured. He answered by showing that he had as much right to put up the price of his wares as a baker or a butcher had to put up prices in his business; that he did not cause the death of people and was under no obligation to bury them. Said, though, that he would bury all he killed. He further explained that there was no overwhelming necessity for a man to have a coffin, or even to be buried. Such arguments did not satisfy the people. None of them were needing coffins, either.

Old man Eli Stone was taken sick before the undertakers had compromised matters, and was not keeping abreast with the coffin war. He was known to be the most contrary man in Nevada. He was old and failed rapidly. The doctors told him to make whatever preparation he desired, as the end was not far off. A lawyer, being called in, was writing the old man's will. The dying man's words were scarcely audible, and he would have to cease speaking, at short intervals, to get his fleeing breath. He could hear well. As the writing of the will progressed, he overheard some of his friends in an adjoining room talking about the monopoly in coffins—the unheard-of charges. He told the lawyer to stop right where he had got. Said he was not going to die. He didn't.

The feeling of hostility toward Hotchkiss increased. There were mutterings for a day or two. Finally a mob gathered in front of his establishment. The men comprising the mob did not happen to be suffering for coffins, either. They were healthy-looking, and some of them would have weighed 200 pounds. One Dutchman—he was very mad—would have weighed 400 pounds. No one ever thought of his being buried in a coffin. Hogshead. They hardly knew how to proceed, their knowledge of mobbing coffin-shops being quite limited. It was first proposed to burn the building and contents. This was objected to, as it would leave the town without coffins, and, consequently, without inducements to the citizens to die. Then one infuriated little man shouted:

"We can't use his coffins."

"I don't want to use one," said another.

"Durned 'f I do," exclaimed a third.

"Me nuther," chimed in a man dressed in buckskin.

And "me nuther" seemed to be the general feeling.

At last Hotchkiss, speaking through an auger-hole, agreed to a compromise. He was to reduce prices for poor people, and where a whole family died to allow them excursion rates.

Old Eli Stone got well. It was thought he would put up an opposition undertaker's shop, to punish Hotchkiss for his meanness. No. He presented Hotchkiss with a $200 gold watch, inscribed: "Yours gratefully."—The Californian.

Ancient Syracuse.

Syracuse (or Siracuse, as it is called to-day,) was the largest and most important of the Hellenic cities. Strabo says it was twenty miles in circumference. Against its impregnable walls the power of Athens was dashed to pieces in B. C. 413, and the city of the arts lost there the prestige and leadership which it never recovered. For a period of about nine centuries, down to the year 212, when the city was plundered of its valuables, and reduced to a provincial town by the Romans under Marcellus, Syracuse, with varied fortune, was always a city great in war and distinguished in arts and letters. It was many times attacted and robbed thereafter, but it did not wholly lose its importance, till the year 828, when the Saracens reduced it to insignificance. Of all the cities of the ancient world that have had a continued existence, after a fashion, Syracuse is now the most desolate, impressive and melancholy waste. Even Girgenti is hardly so swept of remains of power and prosperity. The city of the middle ages of to-day occupies only the small, walled and fortified island of Ortygia, which was not a fifth part, though it was the oldest portion of the ancient city, which is reckoned to have had half a million inhabitants.

The railway ride down the coast from Catania offers a succession of lovely see views, but passed much of the way over low land which is extolled of old as the richest grain-bearing part of the island, and is now very productive of malaria. Especially unwholesome, I should say, is the neighborood of the shallow, water-fowl haunted lake of Lentini, the largest body of water in Sicily? The most famous of the old towns we touched is Agosta (now called Augusta), and beyond this we run along the Megarean bay. At Megara was an old Phœnician settlement and some interesting relics of civilization before the Greek occupation have recently been found there. I saw some rude terra-cotta heads from there, upon the faces of which is that curious, indefinable smile that is characteristic of nearly all the statuary discovered by Gen. Di Cesnola in Cyprus.—Charles Dudley Warner.

"Breaking."

In "breaking," the usual depth of the furrow is three inches, and the usual width sixteen inches. We should certainly prefer to plow a three-inch furrow and "backset" in the fall or after the furrow turned in "breaking" has become measurably disintergrated, which often occurs before fall. "Breaking," "backsetting" and "cross-plowing" constitute the general routine of preparation of prairie sod for a seed-bed, and in any section it is always well to follow the plan already practiced there until experience has demonstrated or strongly suggested a different one; for it may be taken as a rule that the methods adopted by shrewd, practical men in farming in any section are the methonds best adopted to that section under existing conditions. Anyhow, it is not wise for a new-comer to depart from them without a valid reason, and after a trial, on a small scale, of any plan he may think a better one. "Do as your neighbors do" is a safe rule for all new-comers in every part of the country, until they have had experience there. Then, with a full knowledge of the conditions of their new location, the remembrance of different methods followed elsewhere may suggest valuable improvements; but a great many of the avoidable mishaps that befall new settlers in various parts of the country are due to the contempt often felt for the methods already in vogue there, and the consequent substitution of other methods, which, however excellent elsewhere under different conditions, are not suitable in the new situation.—Rural New Yorker.

The Red Snapper.

Probably the best fish added to the list of those that are edible within the past ten years is the red snapper, the scientific name of which is Lutjanus blackfordii. Ten years ago this fish was almost unknown here, though occasionally one was sent to market as a curiosity, and attracted attention because of its brilliant color. It was formerly eaten to some extent by the people of Cuba and the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, but was never used as a food in this latitude until about eight years ago, and it is only within three or four years that it has become such a favorite with the general public, and one of the most popular for table use. In 1878 the first scientific description of the fish was made by Professor G. Brown Gould, of the United States Fish Commission. The fish is hard and firm, resembling closely the sheephead in flavor, and its best qualities are developed by baking. It is caught both on the east and west coasts of Florida, and at different points in the Gulf of Mexico. It is caught entirely by hand, with drop-lines, and affords much sport to the fisherman, as it is gamy, and when caught will make a lively fight to escape. These fish run together in large schools, and average about twelve pounds in weight. The largest one ever exhibited in this city weighed thirty-two pounds. The red snapper is not in market now, the season extending from the first of September to the first of May. Every year the quantity sold shows a steady increase. The average price last season was fifteen cents a pound.—N. Y. Post.

Surprised Duelists.

Several weeks ago Mr. Joseph Buckle and Mr. Thomas Latch came to Little Rock from a Northern City for the purpose of engaging together in business. Shortly after arriving and looking around, Buckle remarked:

"Latch, I have hit upon a happy idea. You see, these people are great on the chivalry business. No man stands so high here as a fighter. When the people find that a man will fight, they entertain a high regard for him. Suppose now, that we become involved in a newspaper controversy, and finally fight a duel. Say that you challenge me. We will have a couple of seconds, of course having it understood that there are to be no bullets in the pistols. We will go out, exchange a few shots, make friends and then go into business together. This will be the biggest advertisement we could have and the people will flock to us. Bravery in the first place and magnanimity in the second, you see."

"That is, indeed, a capital idea," rejoined Buckle." "Yes, sir, people will point at us and say, they are two of the bravest and best men in town."

They immediately began a controversy through the newspapers. Latch called Buckle a squint-eyed liar. Then Buckle called Latch a goggle-eyed liar. Latch called Buckle a spotted liar with a cod-fish eye, and Buckle challenged him. Arrangements were made with a couple of seconds to whom the whole thing was explained, and who considered the plan a fine piece of invention. The men were to fight with Derringers, distance ten paces. A grove, just outside of the city limits, was chosen as the battle ground. On the night before the duel was to take place, the seconds met in a beer saloon, and while sitting at a table, one of them remarked:

"Say, of course, we are paid for this thing, but after thinking the matter over, hanged if I like the idea of giving a reputation of bravery to a couple of cowards. Suppose, in order to remove the counterfeit part of the affair, and to sustain our own characters, we load the pistols with small shot. We get our money, you see, in advance."

The other second agreed.

The morning came, bright and beautiful. The officers of the law knew nothing of the approaching duel, yet there was considerable excitement among the people. A large crowd assembled on the grounds. The combatants, seconds and surgeons arrived.

"I do not like to enter into bloodshed," said Latch, majestically," but Mr. Buckle has insulted me. I have never in my life borne an insult. I give Mr. Buckle another opportunity to retract."

"I never retract," replied Buckle, in a firm voice. "What I have said, I stand by with my life. I am not afraid to die, sir. My reputation to me is worth more than my life."

"As you will have it," said Latch, slowly, turning to take position. "I had hoped that I would never again be forced to shed blood in defense of my honor, but it is as you will have it."

The antagonists were placed in position. The seconds winked at each other.

"Ready, aim, fire!" Bang! Bang!

A couple of loud yells arose. Buckle ran around with one ear almost gone and one eye almost knocked out. Latch writhed in agony and blood. You cursed fool!" yelled Buckle, rushing up to Latch. "What made you shoot me. Ain't you got no sense?"

"Go away!" howled Latch, "or I'll kick the life out of you."

The people couldn't understand why a duel should terminate so violently. The two seconds looked at each other and winked. Buckle and Latch are now in a Northern hospital.—Arkansas Traveler.

A Norse Farm.

Our interpreter, like many of his class in Norway, was an excellent cook, and we perhaps valued his services most in the latter capacity, as we ourselves possessed sufficient knowledge of the language for all ordinary purposes. He was assisted by the farmer's wife, who owned the house and kept us supplied with milk and butter from her dairy. It was a comparatively rich farm, where they pastured fourteen cows this summer, for the hay harvest had been good last year, and upon the excellence of the crop depends the number of cattle these poor people keep through the winter, as they never buy or sell fodder, each farmer maintaining as large a stock as his own land can feed. There were more than twenty farms in this little valley, only four miles long; a few had tenant proprietors, but the greater part were rented by their occupiers, who have always to pay down a large sum on taking possession, with a proportionately reduced yearly rent. The landlords do not seem to take much interest in their property, and as for improvements, there is no likelihood of disputes on this head, as things are just where they were 500 years ago. At the age of sixty it is the custom for a farmer to make over the holding to his son, receiving a sum of money for his interest and a promise that the son will house and feed him for the rest of his days. Thus the old couple have a quiet old age secured to them, and the farm is worked by active hands. Whether these arrangements have a legal sanction we know not, but they certainly form the regular observance of a district in many ways remarkable for its maintenance of ancient customs. One of the most curious is the habit of using patronymics, which has died out in many parts of Norway, but is still retained here, and causes a great deal of confusion in successive generations, especially as it is the rule for the eldest son always to be baptized with his grandfather's Christian name; thus Eric, whose father was Lars, is simply Eric Larsen, and is bound to call his eldest son Lars Ericsen. A wife, too, does not adopt her husband's name, but remains with the euphonious title of, let us say, Petrina Jacobsdatter.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Affections for Pets.

During the Reign of Terror in France a spirit very like that of the worst period of the Roman Empire was evoked, and it has been observed that in both cases the grossest inhumanity was sometimes found united with affection for animals—that is, for pet animals. Fournier was devoted to a squirrel, Couthon to his spaniel, and Marat kept doves. But it may well be questioned whether these particular affections indicated any general temper of mercy toward animals more than toward mankind. Even the most bloodthirsty monsters may have a sincere partiality for their own belongings, friend or child.—Saturday Review.

FACTS ABOUT UMBRELLAS.

Antiquarians say that the umbrella was invented shortly after the flood, and has been the least improved upon of all appliances for human comfort, the shape being now as it was in those youthful days of the world. An umbrella is much like a pigeon as to the question of possession—the last one who gets it owns it. The following facts about umbrellas—especially the last one—may serve every reader a splendid purpose sooner or later: To place your umbrella in a rack indicates that it is about to change owners. An umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but drippings of the rain, indicates courtship. When the man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings, it indicates marriage. To carry it at right angles under your arm signifies that an eye is to be lost by the man who follows you. To put a cotton umbrella by the side of a nice silk one signifies that "exchange is no robbery." To lend an umbrella signifies that "I am a fool." To carry an umbrella just high enough to tear out men eyes and knock off men's hats, signifies "I am a woman." To go without an umbrella in a rain-storm shows I am sure of getting rheumatism, and will have to use St. Jacobs Oil to get well." To keep a fine umbrella for your own use and a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil always in the house, in case of rheumatism or accident, would signify that you are real philosopher.

The following communication to the editor of the Salem (Mass.) Register shows how an artist treated his visitor: "I would have accepted your kind invitation to visit you in your new quarters with pleasure before this had not my old enemy, Mr. Rheumatism, pounced on me so suddenly. He arrived last Friday, and, without stopping to send up his card, rushed in and grasped me by the hand with such a grip that in a few hours my hand and wrist were so badly swollen and painful that I felt as though one of Mr. Hatch's coal teams had run over me. Mr. Rheumatism has been a constant visitor of mine for several years; he always swells and put on a great many airs, making himself at home, devouring my substance and leaving me poor in flesh and pocket. Last winter he came and stayed two months. I then decided that the next time he came I would change his diet. I was somewhat at a loss what to feed him with, but finally concluded to give him three square meals a day of St. Jacobs Oil—morning, noon and night. This fare he is disgusted with, and is packing up his trunk and will leave by to-morrow or next day; says he cannot stop any longer, as he has pressing business elsewhere. He is a treacherous fellow, and he intends visiting some of our Salem friends; if he does, just give him the same fare that I did and he won't stop long.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any Iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS, 3101 Wash. Ave.

AT THE GREAT ITALIAN MUSICAL EXPOSIT
Recently closed at Milan, was probably the MOST EXTRAORDINARY COLLECTION OF MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS, old and new, ever brought together; fully illustrating the great progress which has been made, and present high excellence of this department of manufacture. After exhaustive examinations, tests and comparisons, extending through a period of several months, more than 250 Awards were made, of medals and diplomas, in recognition of degrees of super-excellence attained in the various departments of musical manufacture. For REED INSTRUMENTS, including Organs and Harmoniums of all descriptions, European and American,
THE GRAND SILVER MEDAL,
being the only highest award in this department, was conferred upon the
MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN
Their manufacturers value this extraordinary distinction the more highly because of the importance of the occasion, especially as an INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL INDUSTRIAL COMPETITION IN A COUNTRY EMINENTLY MUSICAL. The Mason & Hamlin Organs were honored by especial exhibition before the Court by CARLO DUCCI of Rome, and with commendation from their Majesties, the King and Queen. At all the great WORLD'S INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITIONS for fourteen years these Organs have received the HIGHEST HONORS, being the only American Organs which have received such at any.
IMPROVEMENTS. During the year just closed, this Company have introduced improvements of greater value than in any similar period since the introduction of the American Organ by them, years since.
ELEGANT STYLES are now received from their factories daily, surpassing in capacity and excellence anything which has before been produced, and certainly worthy to be ranked with the very finest musical instruments in the world. They are in cases of solid black walnut, mahogany, ash, ebonized, etc.; net cash prices, $240, $330, $360, $390, $450, $570, $840 and $900.
POPULAR STYLES, including, also, the most valuable of the recent improvements, and adapted to all uses, public and private, in plain and elegant cases, are at $22, $30, $57, $66, $72, $78, $84, $93, $99, $108, $114, to $200, and up.
EASY PAYMENTS. These organs are sold for cash or easy payments, or will be rented until rent pays for an organ.
A NEW ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE, just issued, fully describing and illustrating MORE THAN ONE HUNDRED STYLES OF ORGANS, with net prices, circulars, etc., will be sent free to any one desiring them. Certainly no one should buy or rent any organ without having these circulars, which contain much useful information about organs.

THE LITTLE FOXES.

A Lay Sermon.

"Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes."—Solomon's Song, 2:15.

DEARLY BELOVED: It is the little things in this life that make up our happiness or misery. If we had to deal only with the great things we could get along. If there were only lions in the way, life would be pleasanter than it is. If we were only expected to be heroes, we could accomplish our warfare and work out our mission with less trouble than now encompasses us. But alas, it is not against lions and great dangers that the voice of inspiration warns us. It is only the "little foxes" we are to take. And the man who despiseth the day of small things is even as he who lifteth up his head in the air and vaunteth himself, even while he sitteth his foot upon the humble banana peel. Falleth he over a man by treading upon a dry goods box, or doth he stumble over a two story house? "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vine."

Brethren, it is easier to kill a lion than to catch a fox. It is easier to build a wagon than it is to make a watch. Great is the warrior who taketh a city, but he is better than the mighty, that is slow to anger, and better is "he that ruleth his spirit" than he that taketh a city.

Why see, how much of human misery is based upon the merest trifles. The man who makes himself supremely wretched because he wants something his neighbor has, and can't get it; the man who swears when he loses his collar button; the man who breaks the furniture because he can't find his hat on the rack when he left it out in the back yard; the man who wants to die when he wakes at night to hear it raining in perfect torrents and remembers that he left all the kindling wood out doors on the cistern box; the man who is unhappy because his boots are tight; the young man, or old man either, who tries to make a forty-dollar salary support a fifty-dollar coat, and is miserable because there is a misfit somewhere; the man who is cross and savage all through house-cleaning week; the man who is always sick and miserable after the picnic; the man who is cross because it is hot, and gruff because it's cold, and irritable because it's wet—what are these men but the tormented victims of "the little foxes that spoil the vines." These men have no heavy burdens, no grave trials. They are miserable because they make themselves so, and they remain miserable because they are too lazy to set a fox trap. If the old world had no heavier sorrows than these, we would be so happy down here some of us wouldn't care to go to Heaven. Lay this paper down right here, dearly beloved, and count up all your own trials and sorrows and tribulations; strike out all the little, petty every-day annoyances you are ashamed to call tribulations, and see how little you have to make life unhappy. Honestly, now, what trouble have you? You need not tell me just give yourself an honest answer.

If we allowed the great wrongs of life to move us as deeply as do the petty trials; if we endured our light afflictions more patiently, and more valiantly combatted the great evils, how soon would we reform this old world. If one-half the indignation that is poured out upon the insensate collar buttons that roll away under the shadowy concealment of impassive lounges and bureaus were as faithless politicians who betray their trusts and barter their principles for place and profit, there would be no mourning over any lack of honest men in public places. If society broke the furniture and foamed at the mouth and tore things when it can find neither its bank account or the Cashier as it does when it simply cannot find its hat, no man could steal trust funds and build a new house therewith. If the man who tries to reverse the appearance of a number nine foot, to make it fit a number six boot, would only try as hard to make his sinful nature compass the virtues of a saint, the world would be fragrant with patience, and his home and neighbors would rise up and call him blessed. We fret and chafe under the little trials, and are too complacent with the great evils. And the man who can ignore the petty vexations and save all his strength of mind and body for the great things, he is the man who leads us all.

It is true, dearly beloved, these petty annoyances make constant demands upon your strength and patience and grace. I know there are a thousand foxes to one lion, and that it is hard work to watch them all the time, but eternal vigilance is the price of a good character, and

"Evil is caused by want of thought
As well as by want of heart."

It would be easier to be a martyr, and go down to the block or to the stake, and have one's head cut off or be burned to a crisp at once and be done with it, than it is to endure eight or ten years of rheumatism. So much the more honor to the patient victims of rheumatism than to the martyrs. I know it is easier to President of the United States, and be a good President, too, than it is to go to sleep with the earache, or with three small mosquitoes in the room, that have made up their minds to a horrible repast of human blood. I know —out of the breadth and depth of my own experience I know whereof I affirm —I know it is an easier matter to edit a newspaper, than it is to put the baby to sleep when the baby isn't feeling particularly sleepy just then. I know the little trials are the hardest; the little temptations are the strongest. The man who would scorn to steal a horse will swear a little sometimes. The man who could not be hired to forge a note will sometimes help to [illegible] a campaign lie; the man who will not commit murder will occasionally scold his wife; and the man who would scorn a lie under any other circumstances can't be trusted in a horse trade. It is easy for any honest man to refuse a bribe; it is hard for the same man to tell the truth about the size and number of the trout he caught. It is comparatively easy to obey the big commandments; it's the finer meshes of the little net that will entangle so many of us.

Dearly beloved, don't try to be heroes, then. Don't aim to be wingless saints. Don't aspire to the distinction of martyrdom. Try to be good, every day, honest, Christian men and women, and see if you have not your hands full. Don't waste your time lion hunting; the lions never hurt anybody, but "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines; for our vines have tender grapes."—Burlington Hawkeye.

Brother Gardner, of the Lime-Kiln Club, on Liars.

"Who am a liar?" asked the old man as he stood up in his usual place and glared around him.

Pickles Smith, Trustee Pullback, Samuel Shin and Evergreen Jones started and turned pale, and there was a death-like silence as Brother Gardner continued:

"An' what shall we do wid him—wid de liar an' de liars? De liar am wid us an' of us an' among us. He gits up wid us in de mawnin' an' he lies down wid us at night. Go to de grocery, an' de grocer smiles an' nods an' lies. Go to de dry-goods man, an' he has a welcome an' a lie. De tailor promises a suit when he knows he can't finish it. De shoemaker promises a pair of butes for Saturday when he has three days' work on de nex' week. De ice man charges us wid twenty-five pounds an' delivers sixteen. Our carpets am warranted, an' yet dey fade. De plumber plumbs an' lies. De painter paints an' lies. De carpenter planes an' saws an' cheats. De dressmaker not only lies but steals de cloth. We all lie like troopers fifty times a day, and de man who won't lie doan' stan' any show.

"An' yet, my frens, what' will we bring up in de eend? When Waydown Bebee axes me fur de loan of a dollar till Saturday, he lies. He knows he can't pay it back under fo' weeks. I know he knows it, an' I lie. I tell him I jist paid out de last shillin' fur a wash-bo'd an' can't possibly raise no mo'. If I ax Judge Hostetter Jackson to sign a bank note wid me he lies when he says he promised his dyin' gran'muder nebber to do so. We lie when we w'ar better cloze dan we kin afford—when we put on airs above us—when we put on our backs what orter be fodder fur our stomachs. We has become a red hot, go-ahead, dust-aroun' nashun, but we has also become a nashun of liars, cheats and false pretenders. We adulterate our goods. cheat in weight, swindle in measure, and put on broadcloath coats to hide de absence of dollar shirts. Our society am full of false pretenders, our religion furnishes a cloak fur hypocrites, an' our charity am but a high-soundin' name fur makin' a dollar bring back ten shillings. I doan' know what de principal wickedness of Sodom consisted of, nor wheder de folks in Gomorrow tole lies or pitched pennies, but if either one could beat an American town of the same size fur lyn' an' decepshun dey mus' have got up werry airly in de mawnin', an' stayed awake all night long. We lie, an' we know we lie. We play the hypocrite, we cheat an' deceive an' yit we want the world to pick us out as shinin' examples of virtue, and we expect our tomb-stones to bear eulogies georgious 'nuff fur angels. Gentlemen, let us kick each odder into doin' better! Let de kickin' begin just whar' it happens, fur we can't hit anybody who doan need it!"

Waydown Beebe arose to inquire if he had ever borrowed a dollar of the President and neglected to return it on the date specified.

"You has, sah!" was the prompt reply.

Waydown scratched his head, looked around for a soft spot to break his fall, and finally sat down with a look of melancholy creeping over his complexion.—Detroit Free Press.

Garibaldi's Wounds.

Garibaldi, in the course of his adventurous life, received ten wounds. Two wounds in the neck and throat, at first believed to be mortal, were received in 1835, in Uruguay, in a sea fight against the Dictator; two wounds in the right arm at the sea fight of Rio Plata, in 1836—every officer and man near Garibaldi being killed or wounded; one wound in the abdomen, on April 30, 1849, while fighting against the French on the Janiculum. The wound was not dangerous but was excessively painful, and Garibaldi concealed his sufferings until the battle was over. On May 8, 1849, at Velletri, he was knocked off his horse by the Neapolitans, and trampled on. He received one bayonet and one sword wound, and was rescued by a band of mere boys who were engaged in the fight. On August 29, 1862, he was wounded in the thigh by one of the Royal Bersaglieri. A second bullet rebounding, broke the ankle bone and remained in the wound. When extracted it exactly resembled in shape a cap of liberty. On July 4, 1866, on his birthday, Garibaldi was hit in the Tyrol by an Austrian bullet. It was a flesh wound in the thigh.—N. Y. Sun.

The Cabbage Worm.

We suppose that none of our readers have been or will be troubled with cabbage worm this season. How can they be, when nearly every week a "cure remedy" has been published! But joking aside, we have published some very simple remedies, or alleged remedies, that we hope will be tried. Cayenne pepper, for instance. This pest has received a great deal of attention, but it seems to baffle all attempts to destroy it or prevent its ravages. Not that there are no remedies, but those generally recommended are either dangerous, expensive or difficult of application. Some time since we published a recommendation of Pyrethrum. The plan of applying it is to mix it with flour, at the rate of one ounce of the powder to five ounces of the flour, and thinly dust it over the infested plants. It is also sometimes used in solution, one ounce of the powder to ten gallons of water. It is said that both of these will destroy not only the cabbage worm but almost any other insect that may be upon the plant. But Pyrethrum is high priced, and that would prevent its universal adoption.

Prof. Thomas, however, mentions another remedy which is within the reach of any one, and which is said to be effectual. It consists of equal parts of saltpeter and salt, dissolved in hot water, and diluted with cold water. Sprinkle this upon the plants during the hottest part of the day while the sun is shining upon them. The proportions of the salt, saltpeter and water are as above described with reference to the two first, and diluted with ten or twelve quarts of water. A rule of proportions cannot, however, be inflexible, for some saltpeter is a great deal stronger than other samples. Prof. Thomas says he tried it on some horse-radish leaves on which there were about a dozen worms. He used a tablespoonful of salt and saltpeter each, dissolved in a cup of hot water and afterward diluted with two quarts of cold water. He sprinkled the leaves at half-past nine o'clock in the forenoon, when the sun was shining brightly. Two days later but two of the worms remained alive. Its effect upon the leaves was not seriously detrimental, although there were a few quite large spots that were killed by the solution. In the month of September following he sprinkled another cluster of horse-radish leaves that were badly infested, using a solution of one-fourth of the same kind of saltpeter and salt, and diluting it with a quart of water. This was put onto the plants at half-past eleven o'clock, when the sun was shining brightly, but it had no effect upon the worms, from which it would appear that to be certainly effective it must be strong enough to injure more or less any plant that is not hardier than the horse-radish. However, it may be worth trying as an experiment on a small scale.

Hot water, which is so strongly recommended, Prof. Thomas does not approve of as a remedy, alleging that it cannot be used at a sufficiently high temperature to kill the worms without injury to the plant. One gardener is quoted as recommending London purple. He says he uses it constantly, and that it neither has any bad effect upon his own family who eat the cabbage, or upon others who buy his cabbages in the market. Paris green or London purple will no doubt kill the worms, but notwithstanding that Prof. Thomas deems it safe to give the gardener's experience, we do not recommend it, and, indeed, would counsel against its use.—Western Rural.

Canning Tomatoes.

Many people who are quite successful in canning fruits generally, are apt to fail with the tomato. A lady says: "We have ten acres of fruit of all kinds and I take a great deal of pride in canning fruit. I get nearly all the prizes at the fairs. I wish you could just peep into my cellar to see my tomatoes and peaches, some canned last fall, and some a year ago, not mentioning my other fruit. I will tell you how I can my tomatoes—both red and yellow. I pick the tomatoes—the smoothest and best shaped—and scald them and skin them very carefully; take the stem out with a penknife, taking care not to cut the tomato so as to let the juice or seed run out; then I place them in the cans, some of them with the stem end next to the can, and some with the blossom ends; then I take the juice that has run out of some that I have peeled to cook, having no seed nor pulp, and add a little salt and pour on my whole tomatoes until nearly full; then place them in a kettle of cold water, and let them cook till I think they are heated through; then I seal them. I use nothing but glass jars —two-quart jars—and after the cover has been on about five minutes I take it off so they will settle, letting the gas out; then I fill up with juice and seal again, and my cans are always full to the cover. A great many have not learned this. You have no idea how nice they look through the glass; they show every vein and rib, and look as if they were put up raw, and when used they are just as if they had been taken from the vines—and if you don't believe me try it this summer. I always keep my fruit in the dark, and it don't fade through the glass."—Donahoe's Magazine.

The Sight of Fishes and Frogs.

At a recent meeting of the Berlin Physiological Society, Prof. Hirschberg communicated the results of his dioptric measurements of the eyes of fishes and amphibia (pikes and frogs), as a further contribution to the comparative dioptrics of the eye. According to his measurements, the cornea in the pike has a large radius of curvature which exceeds the length of the optic axis; consequently, these animals are very myopic in the air; when, however, the eye was opthalmometrically examined under water, the distance of distinct image formation was much greater. The eye in fishes (both those of the pike and roach were examined) behaves quite differently in air and in water. This fact is a contradiction of Herr Rateau's statements, who also found the seeing distance of fishes almost the same in both media. The eye of the frog also behaves differently in water from what it does in air; the radius of curvature of its cornea is much smaller in proportion to the length of the optic axis, and its myopia in air is much less than in fishes. It is remarable that in the case of the eyes of both the frog and the pike, neither a solution of atropine nor of eserine produced any alteration in the distance of the formation of images; it is hence probable that the accommodation of the eye, if it occur at all in these animals, takes place by some other mechanism than that which effects it in in the higher vertebra.

A Little Damp.

"Have we had any rain in Indiana this spring?" he echoed, as he turned in his seat.

"Yes."

"Well, it's been a little damp out there," he softly answered. "The day before leaving home I had to hang up twenty-eight of my ducks. They had become so water-soaked that they could no longer swim. During the month of April it rained on twenty-nine different days.

"What about the other day?"

"O, that was the day on which it snowed twenty-two straight hours."

"How is corn?"

"Well, I planted mine in two feet of water, and between you and me I don't expect over thirty bushels to the acre."

"Wheat looking well?"

"Tolerably well, but the sturgeon and catfish are doing considerable damage."

"Didn't you get any dry weather in May?"

"There was about fifteen minutes one day when it tried to clear up, but I hadn't commenced to bring out my sheep before the rain came down again."

"Grass must be good?"

"Shouldn't wonder, but can't say. When I get back I'm going down in a diving-bell to see."

"Got your potatoes in?"

"Not yet; I've got them loaded on a scow, and the scow anchored in the field in three feet of water."

"Then the prospect looks gloomy?"

"Not any, sir—not any. I've got an ark almost ready to sail, and if it will only rain for another week I'll be the best-fixed man in Indiana."—Wall Street Daily News.

Growth of Colts.

In order to winter a colt well, and have him come out a fine, showy, sturdy animal in the spring, particular attention must be paid to his growth during the first summer and autumn. If the mare's milk is at all deficient to keep the colt in good flesh and thriving steadily, it is best to have recourse at once to cow's milk. Skimmed milk answers very well for this purpose, especially if a little flax-seed jelly, oil or cotton-seed meal, is mixed with it. A heaped table-spoonful, night and morning, is enough to begin with, when the colt is a month old. This can be gradually increased to a pint per day, by the time it is six months old, or double this if the colt be of the large farm or Cart Horse breed.

Oats, also, may be given as soon as they can be eaten. Begin with a half-pint, night and morning, and go on increasing, according to the age and size of the animal, to four quarts per day. These, together with the meal above, should be supplemented with a couple of quarts of wheat bran night and morning. The latter is excellent to prevent worms, and helps to keep the bowels in good condition.

Colts should not be permitted to stand on a plank, cement, paved or any hard floor the first year, as these are liable to injuriously affect the feet and legs. Unless the yard where colts run in the winter has a sandy, or fine, dry, gravelly soil, it should be well littered, so as to keep their feet dry. Mud, or soft, wettish ground, is apt to make tender hoofs, no matter how well bred the colt may be. One reason why the horses in one district grow up superior to those in another in hoof, bone, muscle and action, is because it has a dry limestone or siliceous soil. When the mare is at work, do not let the colt run with her; and if she comes back from her work heated, allow her to get cool before suckling the colt, as her over-heated milk is liable to give the foal diarrhœa.

—Revenge is sweet: "Look here, waiter, there is a fly in this soup," said a well-dressed, but disgusted looking stranger to a waiter at an Austin restaurant. The waiter looked at the fly critically, and finally said: "I'd give five dollars to know for certain if that fly is the one that has been nibbling at my nose all the morning."—Texas Siftings.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—The light which falls upon the earth from the satellites of Mars is about equivalent to what a man's hand on which the sun shone at Washington would reflect to Boston.

—There has been a fair average catch of seals on Neah Bay and Quillente, Washington Territory, this season, but, owing to the advance in cost of catching, and decline in value in foreign markets, the season's business on the whole has been unprofitable.—Chicago Times.

—A valuable fiber called pita or bromelic grows wild in Honduras. It is said to be the strongest fiber known, and can be used, half and half, with silk or wool. Machinery has been made to prepare it for manufacturing purposes, and it is said to be worth, when ready for market, $1,000 a ton.

—Prof. Carlo Pavesi, an Italian, has produced a disinfectant which the medical papers of the Old World heartily commend. It is composed of chloride of lime, camphor and glycerine. The mixture can be used in all cases where phenic acid is now employed, and is less disagreeable, less irritating and less toxic than that acid.

—Diving for black pearls employs a large number of men and boats off the coast of Lower California. Traders supply the vessels and diving apparatus upon the stipulation that the pearls that are found are to be sold to them at specified rates. These jewels are of much beauty and highly prized. A year's production is worth on an average from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

—Straw has long been used for the manufacture of paper, and it is now made into lumber of any desired length and width. It holds nails as well as wood, and is susceptible of a higher finish and polish. Like papier-mache, it is waterproof, and can, therefore, be used for external as well as internal purposes. Samples resemble hardwood, nearly as dark as oak, but more dense in texture, and with a specific gravity one-fifth more than that of black walnut. It is cheaper than wood, and will in the future largely take its place in building. —Chicago Journal.

—The following is a cheap and simple non-conducting covering for steam pipes: Four parts of coal ashes, sifted through a riddle of four meshes to the inch, one part calcined plaster, one part flour, one part fine fire clay. Mix the ashes and fire clay together to the thickness of thin mortar, in a mortar trough; mix the calcined plaster and flour together dry, and add to it the ashes and clay as you want to use it; put it on the pipes in two coats, according to the size of the pipes. For a six-inch pipe, put the first coat about 1 1-4 inch thick; the second coat should be about 1 1-2 inch thick. Afterward, finish with hard finish, same as applied to plastering in a room. It takes the above about two hours and a half to set on a hot pipe.—Germantown Telegraph.

—An engine giving off a total of sixty-horse power was found by the indicator diagrams to be using twenty-five-horse power to get rid of the exhaust steam from the cylinders, and had been working in this condition for years, the loss of so much power never having been even suspected till the indicator diagrams revealed it. Many engines are running in this country, close beside streams of water, and exhausting the steam into the air, when by the addition of a condensing apparatus, a large increase of power could be obtained, or a saving of fuel effected. In an engine taking steam at sixty pounds pressure, and cutting off at half a stroke, the gain of power by condensing would be about 32 1-2 per cent., of which 2 1-2 per cent. would be required to drive the air pumps.

A Somnambulist Bitten by a Moccasin.

A man named Richard Meeler, living near Richey's mill, not far from Homer, Ga., states that during the night he had a dream in which he thought there was a terrible storm rising, and that, for his safety, it would be necessary for him to go down to the mill, some fifty yards away, and hide himself under the floor. There were a great many rocks, stumps, and shafts of machinery under the mill, and while stumbling around underneath and near the water-wheel he was bitten by a moccasin snake in several places on the foot. He then went into a lint-room, in the gin-house near by, and tied two handkerchiefs which he had in his pockets round the limb, one above the other, and started home. He thinks that he was awakened from his dream about the time he got back to the house. He then told the family he had been bitten by a snake, but not to be alarmed. A doctor came to his assistance, and he is now in a fair way to recover. His family say that he is in the habit of walking in his sleep frequently. —Atlanta Constitution.

—The great Chicago fire is to be reproduced, on a reduced, yet extensive scale, in a Boston summer garden. The spectators will look across a lake at a section of old Chicago, which will take fire and burn with historical accuracy. "Over 150 persons," says the manager's glowing announcement, "will take part in the representation, as citizens, firemen, etc. Fire engines drawn by real horses, will battle with the blaze, boats on the lake will take away the fleeing populace, railroad trains conveying engines from other cities will dash into the burning town, and everything possible will be done to give the event the air of reality."—*N. THE CHILTON VIEW.

W. H. LAWRENCE, Editor.

CLANTON, ALA., AUG. 17, 1882.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

America produces more nails, more pumps, more agricultural machinery, more street rails, more locomotives, more cars than all the rest of the world put together.

The first locomotive built in this country was constructed by Peter Cooper, and was run on the Baltimore & Ohio from Baltimore to Ellicott's Mills, Md., in the spring of 1830.

Nicholson gave the English lion taffy after it had chewed up Alexandria. In sailing around the bay buzzing for the English fleet, our navy showed a toadyism which gave the respectable American a desire to run off and vomit.

On Dec. 31, 1878, the distribution of the population of Egypt was as follows; Cairo, 327,492; Alexandria, 165,752; Damietta, 32,730; Rosetta, 16,243; Suez, 11,327, Port Said, 3,854; other towns, 11,747; provinces, 4,948,512; total, 5,517,627.

The trial of the duellist Garland, who shot and killed Joseph Addison, of Baltimore, in a duel fought on the 14th ult., in Lunenburg county, Va., has begun. True bills were found against Garland and the two seconds, and all three were indicted for murder.

A gambler who died in Leadville the other day had a bigger brain than Daniel Webster. This partially reconciles us to the loss of that $2. There's no use trying to buck an institution presided over by a man with a bale of intellect as big as the combined cerubim of three statesman.—Laramie City Boomerang.

The right of a woman past the age of 21 to marry whom she pleases has just been vindicated in Missouri. The father of Laura Robbs, aged 27, attempted to hold her to continued service in the parental home by locking her up in a room when she had made a verbal contract to become the wife of Geo. W. Bishop. A writ of habeas corpus unlocked the door, and the marriage took place in spite of the father's objections.

Bob Ford, who killed Jesse James, and his brother Charles Ford, were in Chicago, Aug 1, enjoying life, and spending $10,000 which they received as a reward for ridding the country of the outlaw. In an interview they said they would stay here about a week, and then go to Cincinnati. Bob Ford says Frank James was in good health when he last saw him. He does not believe Frank will ever attempt to reorganize.

Chicago Times: The courts have made a gross mistake, apparently. They fined Gen. Curtis a thousand dollars for violating the law regarding political assessments upon civil servants; but the New York State Republican Committee commends Curtis' action, and resolves to pay all the expense of his defense, including, of course the amount of his fine. Some people might look upon this action as compounding a felony. The committee regard it as upholding a useful patriot.

The Quitman (Ga.) Free Press is responsible for the following: "A Quitman darkey went to sleep while fishing one night recently and tumbled off into deep water. He sank and rose a couple of times, when his companion, old Uncle Dick Lewis, seeing that he had made no effort to save himself, got hold of him and succeeded in drawing him to the bank. It was discovered that the negro was still asleep, his cold bath having no effect on him whatever. Uncle Dick managed to awaken him by rolling him in the mud and wearing out two or three light wood knots over his head. When the darkey awoke he expressed much surprise to find his clothes wet, and he asked Uncle Dick to explain. We think that Brooks county is entitled to the medal for having the drowsiest darkey in America."

The Dublin Review, the most intellectual periodical published in Ireland, and strongly representative of the Roman Catholic prelacy, says of the land Corporation of Ireland, the association gotten up to fight the Land League: "It may be briefly said that its purpose is to buy up the land of Ireland, and then either to keep up the old impossible rents or to colonize Ireland by loyal farmers from other countries. In the end it will no more exterminate Irishmen from the soil of Ireland than the ancestors of some of their landlords exterminated them in days gone by. It will add a hundred fold to the exasperation of the present conflict. It will unite every class of Irishmen (not landlords) by a sense of common danger. Nothing will better smooth out the divergence of opinion between Bishop and Bishop than this declaration of war. The watchword of the new League is 'the old rents or extermination.'"

Congress Adjourned.

Congress adjourned yesterday afternoon; that is to say, the Senate adjourned. The majority of the members of the House had already slunk home, and there was no quorum left in Washington to pass a legal vote on the question of adjournment, or on any other question. Of the two hundred and eighty-nine members of the House, only about eighty saw out the session.

The single fact of interest afforded by the closing hours is the failure of the House to make the customary vote of thanks to the Speaker. No Republican Congressman, not even Robeson, had the assurance to get upon his legs and utter a complimentary adjective in regard to the stupidest individual that was ever put into a place of responsibility, to carry out the plans of rascals.

Republican Senators and Representatives who were recently tumbling over each other in their eagerness to vote away the people's money, are now equally eager to explain away the monstrous record. Hiscock has made his explanation; Allison, at the other end of the Capitol, has made his; and the fact remains that the aggregate of this year's appropriations is $294,293,097.

Let us turn for half a minute to ancient history to show what these figures mean. Under Grant the climax of dishonesty and extravagance was reached by the Forty-third Congress, when the total of its appropriations mounted to $172,000,000; and the Republican majority responsible for that total of $172,290,700 was promptly overwhelmed and swept out of power by the Tidal Wave of 1874.

Field-Marshal Halstead thus remodels the map of the Old World: "Egypt is the half-way house between England and India, and more important than Gibraltar or Malta. Of course the English can not take Egypt into their everlasting keeping without agreeing to compensate other powers. Now is the time to make enduring peace and friendship with Russia, by giving her Constantinople, and thus putting an end to the Eastern question, and to the hullabaloo about the bugaboo of a holy war. Then Germany needs her Baltic provinces and Holland. With Constantinople, Russia could afford her share of this compensation. France should have Luxembourg and Belgium to replace Alsace and Lorraine; and England could afford, for the sake of Egypt, to drop her guarantee of the Kingdom of Belgium. Austria should have deep slices into Turkish territory; and Italy could have the Italian Tyrol and the Ionian Islands; while Greece should take the old province of Macedonia. With an adjustment on this scale, the Great Powers would all be in a state of satisfaction, and they could reduce their armaments and give attention to the betterment of administration, to internal improvements, and all those victories of peace that are not so renowned as they ought to be."

Calera News.

The Calera base ball club is making arrangements to beat Clanton next Friday.

Capt. W. H. Lee has leased the lime kiln half a mile east of Calera, and now is making lime.

The job office of the Shelby Sentinel will be removed to Calera as soon as a printing office can be built. Better shipping facilities being the inducements offered by Calera.

Every Radical that voted in Calera, on election day, voted for Mr. J. V. Teague for justice of the peace. They were rather fast, the election will not come off before 1884.

The old topers about Calera drink essence of Jamaica ginger when they can't get whiskey or beer. Prohibition can't beat the "old soldier" every time.

The last election proved that the temperance "attachment" of the Radicals deceived no one, but a few, a very few softheads. In this beat, the color line was closely drawn, and if we could have had a full turnout of the Democrats, we would have beaten them in this their stronghold.

The VIEW seems to be more appreciated at a distance than it is at home, judging from the advertisements. I am afraid your home folks are not very enterprising or they would advertise more. I am glad to see though that my old friend Fox is doing a business that pays him to keep a standing "ad." in the VIEW. RUFUS.

Alabama Views.

Mobile, Montgomery, and Selma have received bales of the new cotton crop.

A million dollars' worth of improvements are being added to Birmingham.

The Selma "Pastime" base ball club has been defeated by a New Orleans club.

Thos. G. Hayden, assistant Postmaster at Talladega, has been arrested charged with robbing the mails.

Walter B. Eatman has left Greene county for Texas. The Mirror says: "We hope he will find a good country for he certainly has left one."

The election of a clerk for the House of Representatives is next in order. We see that D. W. McIver, Esq., of the Tuskegee News, is among the candidates for the position. He is experienced and capable, and would fill the place with great credit.

We congratulate our enterprising contemporary, the Tuskaloosa Gazette, upon its neat appearance in a brand new dress. With "handsome Jim," as oarsman and the "Veteran Steve" at the helm, the Gazette is bound to meet with a successful voyage.

We notice in one of our exchanges, the Edgefield (S. C.) Chronicle, that Mr. A. A. Clisby, of the wholesale drug house of Clisby & Co., of this city, offers for sale his plantation, and all of his property in Edgefield. We understand it is his purpose to sell out his entire interest in South Carolina and invest in Birmingham property.—Birmingham Observer.

The Democrats of the 6th district have re-nominated Col. G. W. Hewitt, of Jefferson, for Congress. After ineffectual attempts, which ran up to the 576th ballot, to nominate by the two-thirds rule, the majority rule was adopted. Messrs. Clements, of Tuskaloosa, Stansel, of Pickens, and Shields, of Lamar, were rival candidates for the nomination.

Ashville Ægis: Don't overlook the fact that we want a heavy wheat crop next year in Alabama. Take the lands between uplands and bottom lands as near as can be done. Turn the soil with a two horse plow. Break it up well with a harrow. Sow the wheat, harrow or plow it in with a light draft plow, and then if you can, run a roller over it.

In our last issue we assured the public the Georgia Pacific, in which the people of this section of country are so deeply interested, would be completed to Birmingham within twelve months. We based our opinion upon the fact that the company had ordered the contract to be let for building of the bridge over Coosa river and upon the additional fact that the survey had been made and the route definitely located between here and Anniston. In addition to this General Gordon, who has been in Europe for the purpose of negotiating the company's bonds, telegraphs to Atlanta that he had placed three millions of these bonds. This virtually settles the question as to the building of the road, the only doubt in the matter now is as to the time it will take to do it. The three millions in sight guarantees its completion at the earliest possible time, and we may look for the grading to begin at this end in a very few weeks.—Birmingham Observer.

Jemison Items.

Health of the community good, and crops are fine.

Prof. Burn's school is progressing finely.

Mr. J. Dickinson is imparting literary knowledge to nearly fifty pupils at Rocky Mount church, three miles east of Jemison. Mrs. M. Campbell, of Randolph, 90 years of age, visited the family of Col. Ira Campbell, near Jemison last week where she was surrounded by a daughter, grand daughters, and a few great grand children.

We have some fine watermelons in waiting for the editor of the C. V. when he next comes up.

Misses Minnie and Irene Campbell have just returned from a visit to Birmingham and Coketon, of which they speak in glowing terms.

The district meeting at Centrehill Baptist Church closed on the 13th inst., with a large attendance.

A. P. C.

Mrs. C. H. Smith, of this place, is visiting relatives in Atlanta, Ga.

The match game of ball between the "Edwards" club of this place, and the Scotland, club resulted in a score of 6 to 21 in favor of the Scotland club.

We received a pleasant call on uesday, from Mr. D. C. White, avelling correspondent of the ashville World. He is a most able gentleman, and is engaged writing up the industries of Ala-ama. We trust that he will ve a big "say" about Chilton.

The Board of County Commissioners saw fit, at its last meeting, to reduce the rate of county taxation from five-tenths to four-tenths of one per centum; or from fifty to forty cents on every one hundred dollars worth of property. Another evidence of the prosperity of our county.

A delightful entertainment was given the young people of our village on last Tuesday evening, at the residence of Capt. T. M. Ternan, the occasion being the birthday of the genial host. Our young people will long bear in remembrance the Captain's birth-day, and join us in wishing many happy returns.

Chilton county is now on the up grade and is outstripping every adjoining county in progress and the increase of general wealth. During the past decade, from 1870 to 1880, her population was nearly doubled, and we predict that the census of 1890 will show a population fully if not more than doubling that of 1880.

We wish it understood that we are not responsible for the statements of correspondents or other contributors to these columns. Whatever peculiar views, opinions, ideas, declarations or asseverations may appear over a signature, are not to be laid at our door. We would also make it known that the fighting-editor of this paper has removed to another county, where he says he intends to remain. We always thought he was a sensible man and now we know it.

Yesterday's Advertiser has the following: "Col. Robt. H. Knox, of Clanton, was in the city yesterday, in the interest of Goodgame, who is charged with the murder of Mr. Mullins, near that place. He has secured a writ of habeas corpus, and a trial will be had to-day." We learn that the Advertiser is somewhat in error, and that the writ of habeas corpus, which has been sworn out in the case, is not returnable until Wednesday, the 23d inst., at which time the trial will take place.

The Official Vote.

The official count of the vote of Chilton county gives O'Neal 1,009, and Sheffield 158. O'Neal's majority 851. The vote was very light, little interest being taken in the election. O'Neal ran a little behind his ticket, while Sheffield ran a little ahead of his mongrel crew. The Democratic ticket received 1,028, and the Independent 143. Majority for the Democratic ticket 885. The official count of the vote for representative made no change in the vote as published last week, which gave Edwards a plurality of 171 votes over Foshee.

We learn from a correspondent writing from Calera, that an effort will be made in the next Legislature to annex a part of Chilton county to Shelby. The long and short of this matter is that Calera is reaching out for territory which will either justify giving her the court house of a new county, or tend to give her the courthouse of Shelby. An effort was made during the last session of the Legislature to change the boundary line between the counties of Chilton and Shelby, which, had it succeeded, would have given a large strip of Chilton to Shelby. The attempt, however, met with the failure it should have met with, and the next attempt will meet with no better success.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Go to the mite meeting to-night.

Commissioners Court was in ssion last Monday.

Mite meeting to-night at the sidence of Dr. W. E. Stewart.

The good templars meet every iday night, and the lodge connues to grow.

We are desirous of having a live [illegible] each neighbor- [illegible] in the county.

The vote in this county was ry light. Of the 158 votes cast Sheffield Verbena polled 65.

Rev. Mr. Dykes, a primitive ptist from Coosa county preach- in the Clanton Methodist hurh last Saturday night.

We were pleased to receive a ll on Monday from Mr. W. F. aughton of Verbena. He reports ings booming in his neighborod.

We shall expect all of our farers when they have disposed of eir bountiful crops to come forrd and subscribe for their coun- paper.

Mr. R. M. Goodgame was taken Montgomery and placed in jail t Thursday. This was done to sure the safe keeping and protion of the prisoner.

George Hunter wishes to anunce to the colored people that e services of a competent teacher ve been secured, and that Clann now has a good colored school.

We find it necessary to state at our club rates with the Louisle Courier-Journal are strictly sh rates and neither paper will furnished unless the money acmpanies the order.

A series of mite meetings has en inaugurated by the ladies of e Baptist Church, the proceeds be used in the purchase of an gan for their church. It is a mmendable move and we are ad to say, is succeeding.

The Calera House at Calera, kept John D. Campbell is the best ace in America to "put up" at. e table can't be beat, and the tentions received by guests are nsurpassed. The Campbells know w to run a hotel.

We received a pleasant call on esday, from Mr. D. C. White, avelling correspondent of the ashville World. He is a most able gentleman, and is engaged writing up the industries of Alama. We trust that he will ve a big "say" about Chilton.

The Board of County Commissioners, saw fit, at its last meeting, to reduce the rate of county taxation from five-tenths to four-tenths of one per centum; or from fifty to forty cents on every one hundred dollars worth of property. Another evidence of the prosperity of our county.

A delightful entertainment was given the young people of our village on last Tuesday evening, at the residence of Capt. T. M. Ternan, the occasion being the birthday of the genial host. Our young people will long bear in remembrance the Captain's birth-day, and join us in wishing many happy returns.

Chilton county is now on the up grade and is outstripping every adjoining county in progress and the increase of general wealth. During the past decade, from 1870 to 1880, her population was nearly doubled, and we predict that the census of 1890 will show a population fully if not more than doubling that of 1880.

We wish it understood that we are not responsible for the statements of correspondents or other contributors to these columns. Whatever peculiar views, opinions, ideas, declarations or asseverations may appear over a signature, are not to be laid at our door. We would also make it known that the fighting-editor of this paper has removed to another county, where he says he intends to remain. We always thought he was a sensible man and now we know it.

Yesterday's Advertiser has the following: "Col. Robt. H. Knox, of Clanton, was in the city yesterday, in the interest of Goodgame, who is charged with the murder of Mr. Mullins, near that place. He has secured a writ of habeas corpus, and a trial will be had to-day." HAPPY LOVE.

While they sat before the fire,
Nothing more did he desire
Than to get a little nigher,
If he could;
And his heart beat high and higher,
And her look grew shy and shyer,
When he sidled up close by her,
As he should.

Then he ventured to inquire
If her sister, Jane Mariar,
And her mother and her sire,
Were quite well?
And from time to time he'd eye her,
As though he would like to buy her,
And his bashfulness was dire,
For a spell.

Then his husky throat grew dryer
When he told her that the 'Squire
To himself would gladly tie her
If she would;
Might he now go ask her sire?
And he thought he would expire,
When she said, to his desire,
That he could!

Lemons.

The following concise account of the properties and uses of the lemon is taken from an exchange:

The lemon is a native of Asia, although it is cultivated in Italy, Portugal, and in the south of France. In Europe, however, it seldom exceeds the dimensions of the smallest tree, while its native state is to grow over ninety feet in height.

Every part of this tree is valuable in medicine, though we rarely employ any of it but its fruit, that is the lemon itself.

And every one knows how to employ this, as in lemonade: To squeeze the juice into cold water, this is the shortest way, or to cut into slices and let soak in cold water; or to cut into slices and then boil it; either way is good. Lemonade is one of the best and safest drinks for any person, whether in health or out. It is suitable in all stomach diseases, is excellent in sickness—in cases of jaundice, gravel, liver complaint, inflammation of the bowels and fevers.

It is a specific against worms and skin complaints. The pippins crushed may also be used with water and sugar as a drink. Lemon juice is the best anti-scorbutic remedy known. It not only cures the disease, but prevents it. Sailors make a daily use of it for this purpose. A physician suggests rubbing of the gums daily with lemon juice to keep them in a healthy condition.

The hands are kept clean, white, soft and supple by the daily use of lemon instead of soap. It also prevents chilblains. Lemon is used in intermittent fevers, mixed with strong, hot black tea or coffee, without sugar. Neuralgia may be cured by rubbing the part affected with a lemon. It is valuable to cure warts and to kill dandruff on the head. In fact its uses are manifold, and the more we employ it externally the better we shall find ourselves. Natural remedies are the best, and nature is our best doctor, if we would only listen to it. Decidedly, rub your hands, head, and gums with it, and drink lemonade in preference to all other liquids. Another use to which they may be put is the flavoring of strawberries. We are in the habit of eating strawberries with cream, juice of an orange, etc. Now the way to make them harmless is to cover them with a large allowance of powdered sugar, and then squeeze over them one, two or three lemons according to the quantity. The lemon juice brings out the strawberry flavor better than anything else, and its acidity is counteracted by the large quantity of sugar. The lemon juice should be in the same proportion as the cream would be in the place of which it is used.

A Wonderful Lake.

Carniola, in the Western part of Austria, and fronting on the Adriatic Sea, is a region remarkable chiefly for its subterranean streams and immense caverns and abysses. It is very mountainous, being traversed by spurs of the Alps, and covers an area of 3,857 square miles. Its inhabitants are a hardy, thrifty race, engaged in the cultivation of wine, timber, maize, and millet.

Of all the wonders of nature to be met with in this country the one most deserving of notice is the lake of Zirknitz. This lake takes its name from a small market town with a population of 1,500, and situated about thirty miles northeast of Trieste, the principal sea-port city of Austria.

Lake Zirknitz lies in a deep valley, surrounded by beautiful hills. It is a fair sheet of water, six miles long and three miles broad, and teeming with fishes and water-fowl. The monotony of this large expanse of water is relieved by five small islands, on one of which is the village of Ottok. These islands are favorite resorts for picnic parties. The bottom of the lake is formed of limestone rock, and is full of clefts and fissures. During prolonged dry weather the waters pass into these caverns, carrying their finny inhabitants with them. The church bells give warning when the first sign of the sinking of the lake is observed, and the people hasten to make the most of the fishing while there is yet time.

Icebergs from an Esthetic Point of View.

It is a pity that the iceberg should be so highly dangerous, for nothing that floats upon the deep is more impressive and picturesque. Such beautiful objects ought to be fixtures, that they might be sighted and their grandeur enjoyed without more risk than a lovely stretch of coast or a green and gleaming South Sea island offers. Yet, if the truth must be told, something of the composite emotion which the spectacle of an iceberg excites is due to the element of fear which the spectacle conveys along with its majesty and beauty. Figure a sea shrouded in driving mist and rain and feathery particles of snow; the billows leap out of the thickness as though born of the void from which they curl, combing over in green transparent arches and breaking into dazzling spaces of foam; the decks are dark with wet, and the ship has a gray and frozen look as she sweeps over the hissing and roaring and trampling surges toward that whirling fog-curtain which ever recedes before her while it closes upon her astern. Suddenly a loud voice rings sharply out of the pallid vagueness of the forecastle; and even as the helm is shifted there shapes itself with terrible abruptness out of the obscurity ahead a huge outline—an object like an island, fantastically covered with minarets, steeples, towers, looming bastions, and cathedral-like forms which vanish in the rushing folds of the pale, rain-swept sea-mist.

The thunder of the sea smiting its base and boiling up in heights of sparkling smoke awakens a thousand sullen echoes in the crystal caverns, in the gloom of the precipices, and amid the marble-like hills and heights of the enormous berg. As the voyager sweeps past he hears the cracking and rending of ice, he marks the brilliancy of snow upon the jutting points which open out upon the sight with startling suddenness amid flaws in the pouring and eddying mist, and he feels the stinging breath of the frozen mass on his cheek as the gale blows past it down upon him. As the ship runs roaring by the thunder-laden apparition large lumps of ice shower upon her, and over the rail, the green fragments may be seen colored to the very complexion of the deep half leaping out of the swirl of foam along-side, and vanishing astern amid the swoop of the rushing waters. What pen can describe the desolation of a berg so beheld, looming up, as it were, out of space, filling the eye for a moment with its mighty, lonely, and wildly grand conformation, and then disappearing as though its solid and substantial proportions were as visionary as the fabric of the vapor that has enclosed it? No hint of life is seen upon it. No sea-bird screams around its nodding summit. It is a drifting phantom from a world of phantoms, to melt presently and vanish utterly, yet, while it stands, eloquent with hints of the white and silent realm from which it has floated—a majestic ocean-idyl "writ large," and rich with a solemn poetry set to music of the organ-roll of the deep.—London Telegraph.

A Mouse and a Clam.

One night last week, at a late hour, a gentleman of this city, who, as a matter of habit, rarely retires before midnight, had occasion at that "witching hour" to attend to the furnace fire before retiring. The wind was blowing almost a gale, and the rain was pouring down in torrents, and the night was one to induce a feeling of "uncertainty" in the heart of the bravest. The gentleman in question never indulges in intoxicating liquors, and there is no reason to suppose that his nerves were unusually disturbed. He is very fond of clams, however, and on the morning of the day when the incident occurred had ordered a peck of clams, which were to be cooked the next day. As he descended the stair on his midnight errand, with a lamp in his hand, and shading the lamp with his hand to shield it from the draft, he observed that the bucket of clams had been left at the foot of the stairs.

Groping his way slowly down the stairs, and looking cautiously for the cellar floor, he suddenly saw what appeared to be a small, white clam move gradually from the bucket, where he had hitherto been reposing peacefully with his mates, and work his way steadily and quickly across the cellar floor and mount the wall at the further side of the cellar, to a distance of three feet from the floor. Never having seen a clam walk before, and being especially interested in the apparent fact of the ability of a clam to climb a cellar wall, the gentleman courageously determined to investigate the matter in the interests of science and curiosity. He placed the lamp at a convenient position, took up a piece of barrel-hoop, and boldly advanced, resolving to become a martyr to science if need be. The white object proved to be indeed a clam, but the clam had used other means of locomotion than its own in navigating across the cellar floor. An indiscreet mouse had walked over the bucket of clams, and an ambitious clam had fastened his nippers on the mouse's tail. The mouse becoming frightened at the advent of the gentleman above mentioned, started for his hole in the wall, when he was compelled to stop on account of the shell-fish attachment to his tail.

The gentleman who narrates the incident is very respectable, and is a regular attendant at church.—Providence Journal.

—The executioner of the Zuni Indians was at Washington when Guiteau was hung and desired to witness the execution. Although he did not gain admission to the jail he secured a very full description of the hanging in all its essential points to the end that he may substitute, in his far away sandy home, the scaffold and the rope for the heavy wooden club with which he has heretofore severed the spinal cord of members the tribe condemned to death.—Chicago Herald.

—The best cuts of meat are worth three cents a pound in Texas. And yet it costs nearly a week's salary for a roast of beef on Sunday in Chicago.—Chicago Herald.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Gas has been successfully introduced as an illuminant on the street cars of the British metropolis. The holder, which is charged at the end of every night trip, is placed under the seats.

—Metallic pens were first introduced for sale about 1803, though iron pens are mentioned in 1685. Up to 1835, or thereabouts, quill pens were almost universally used. Now they are rarely seen.

—The Oil and Drug News says that a nearly bald servant of Mr. Stevens, a British Consul, used, after trimming lamps, to rub his hands on his head, and after three months had a much finer head of glossy black hair than ever before. Mr. Stevens tried the experiment on animals which had lost their hair, with equal success. The petroleum should be of the most refined quality, and should be rubbed in vigorously and quickly with the palm of the hand, six or seven times, at intervals of three days, except in the case of horses' tails and manes, when more applications may be needed.

—Dr. Amat says that sea bathing "has proved of great benefit in many cases of disease of the eye. The improvement appears to be due to two causes: 1. The influence which such a course has upon the general health by curing anæmia and elevating the tone of the system, since sea bathing is in the highest degree restorative. 2. Sea water and occasionally, also, the atmosphere of the sea has a local irritant action which should be watched, since it is most serviceable when there is a chronic, torpid and indolent inflammation, while it is exceedingly dangerous when the inflammation is of the acute kind."

—The common idea that a volcano is a burning mountain, from the summit of which issue smoke and flame, is declared to be erroneous by Prof. Judd, of the Royal School of Mines. In a work lately published by him on this subject, he asserts that the action of volcanoes is not due to burning or combustion, nor is it necessary that they should be. On the contrary, according to Prof. Judd, the volcano hole is very often not on the summit, but on the side, sometimes at the base of the mountain or hill, and it sends forth steam rather than smoke—the supposed raging flames being simply the glowing light of a mass of molten material reflected from these vapor clouds. This work claims to be the result of the latest and most scientific investigations of the subject in all countries.—Chicago Tribune.

—A steam generator has been devised on a plan by which, at each stroke of the piston of the engine, a certain quantity of water is projected against two strongly heated metal plates, the steam so produced going directly into the cylinder—an arrangement by which not only a special generator, but also the valve system for the entering steam, is superfluous. In a description given of this mechanism, the vaporizing surface is said to consist of two metallic cones, one within the other, with an interval of about 0.04 inch between; the hollow space is divided into two chambers, each of which is connected with one side of the cylinder; and the gases play first on the inner surface of the double cone, then on the outer. This arrangement, as far as tested, has given quite satisfactory results.—N. Y. Sun.

Valuable Coral.

The best coral is worth five times its weight in gold. Mr. Casalta informs me that the finest pink coral (known in the trade as "extra rose") has often commanded from $400 to $600 per ounce, and that he once paid for the very finest piece of "extra rose" that he ever saw, at the rate of 6,000 francs each ounce—i. e., in round numbers $1,200 per ounce. Now, as each ounce of gold is worth about $16, we can see that this unsurpassed piece of fine coral was worth seventy-five times its weight in gold. But Mr. Casalta added another consideration—i. e., that in cutting up and filing away, and washing this fine coral, enough was lost to make its price really more than one hundred times that of gold. He further informed me that coral of this preciousness was, when worked up into ornaments, really valued by the carat, and was treated as a precious stone, and was set with pearls and diamonds. I asked what such highly prized and high-priced coral was used for, and the reply was that "the English nobility and millionaires greatly esteemed it when set in rings, and a few of the crowned ladies of Europe had it among their choicest jewelry, as breastpins, ear-rings, etc."

During the time of the First Napoleon, red—a deep red—coral was the style, and that color commanded the highest price; but the English of late years, following the style of the ex-Empress Eugenia, have taken to the "extra rose," as it better suits the blonde complexion of les Anglaises. Beside, it is the rarest of coral. In Spain, on the contrary, the extra rose is at a discount, as the brunettes d'Espagne want the deep red of the first empire to set off their darker complexion.

In India, Persia, China and Japan the dark red commands a very high price, being, in the two first countries, used to adorn their turbans, and the handles of their swords and poniards, and also as rosaries by their priests, and as charms placed on the bodies of the dead to drive away evil spirits. In China it has a great value as buttons of office for mandarins' caps. In Japan coral is also used as a badge of distinction.

Just here comes in a curious fact. From Italy coral has hitherto been exported to Japan, but recently there has come to Italy a pink coral of good rose color, purporting to be found in Japanese waters. It is of immense size—one piece is said to have measured fifteen inches wide and five feet long. The Challenger, in its dredgings off the coasts of Japan, never found it, neither did any of the staff ever hear of it from the Japanese, and Prof. Mosley is inclined to doubt if it comes from Japan. Nevertheless, it has been brought to Italy, and I have seen specimens at Sig. Casalta's as fine as the best rose of Sardinia. Letters have already been sent to Japan concerning it, and I hope some day to find out its "local habitation" and write you thereon.—Naples Cor. London Times.

—Sufficient attention is not paid to the importance of cutting off the flowering shoots of rhubarb as soon as they appear. If we would have a strong growth of leaf and stem we must not permit the roots to be weakened in this way. —A novelty to many cooks is called white fruit-cake. The recipe calls for one cup of butter, two cups of sugar, two cups and a half of flour, the whites of seven eggs, two teaspoonfuls of baking-powder (not heaping, but evenly full), one pound of raisins, figs, dates, and blanched almonds, a quarter of a pound of citron; cut or, better still, chop these all fine, sift flour over and through them, and after mixing the cake, put the fruit in last. This makes a large cake, and it requires a long time to bake it; it should be baked slowly, so that the center may be as well done as the outside.—N. Y. Post.

DR. HARTER'S

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any Iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT [illegible]

"GOOD-BY."

BY MATTIE N. BROWN.

"Good-by," a lover whispers,
Standing beside the gate;
"'Tis hard, so hard to leave you,
But we cannot alter fate;
Think of me, love, for aye,
Good-by, sweetheart, good-by."

"Good-by, dear mother; hold me
Close to your loving heart.
Ah! how it hurts to say it,
To know that we must part;"
List, at the [illegible] heart-cry,
"Good-by, mother, good-by."

The little wasted fingers
[illegible]
And baby's bright young spirit,
[illegible]
Soars for its home on high,
Followed by our "good-by."

Bring hither spotless lilies,
Roses and milk-white phlox;
With loving fingers strew them
[illegible]
[illegible]
"Good-by, alas, good-by."

Thus, at each [illegible] turn,
[illegible]

Good-by, good-by, good-by.

MARIE ANTOINETTE.

The History of a Beautiful but Unfortunate Woman.

Marie Antoinette Josepho Jeanne De Lorraine was the youngest daughter of Francis [illegible] and the renowned Maria Theresa of Austria. On the day of her birth, Nov. 2, 1755, occurred the terrible earthquake which laid Lisbon in ashes, and caused the death of thousands of human beings. Minds prone to look upon such disasters as evil omens never failed to recall this as one of the many which attended the career of Marie Antoinette.

As a child her bright looks, quick intelligence and benevolently-affectionate nature made her the special favorite of her royal parents. When, in 1764, Francis Joseph quitted his family to go to Innspruck, which proved to be his last journey, he ordered her to be brought to him just as his carriage was about to start, saying:

"Adieu, my dear little daughter. Father wished once more to press you to his heart."

This was the last time they saw each other. A few days after the Emperor died at Innspruck, and the royal child, then about 9 years of age, felt her first great sorrow.

For two centuries and a half France and Austria had been enemies. It had ever been Maria Theresa's ambition to increase the prosperity of her country, and she prided herself on putting an end to this enmity by an alliance with France, which she had contracted some years previously.

As her daughter Marie gave decided promise of the marvelous beauty for which she was afterward so celebrated, her ambitious mother endeavored to cement the French alliance more closely by proposing to Louis XV. a marriage between the Dauphin, his grandson and heir, and her youngest child. Having this brilliant destiny in view for her [illegible] daughter, the Empress had her portrait painted by French artists, and caused her to be thoroughly instructed in the French language.

Metastasio, the favorite court poet, taught the young maiden Italian, and the great composer Gluck gave her lessons on the harpsichord.

It is said she did not excel in her studies, as she was naturally too full of life and spirits to be gravely studious. She was, however, always active in benevolence; and, being accustomed from the noble example of her mother to feel an interest in the welfare of the poorest, she carried into the country of her adoption a disposition ever leading her "to sympathize with sorrow, to succor misfortune and distress, and to be indignant at injustice and ingratitude."

By the spring of 1770, all arrangements for the marriage of the Dauphin with Marie Antoinette were completed; those of France being on the most splendid scale, for the court of Louis XV. was as celebrated for its taste and magnificence as it was notorious for its [illegible].

On the 20th of April, the bride, not yet fifteen, quitted her Austrian home to become the wife of a youth she had never seen, and to abide in a country where she knew not one person as an acquaintance. For the last time—though she then knew it not—she gazed on the familiar scenes of her childhood, leaving behind her forever her companions and playmates to whom she had warmly endeared herself.

The parting between mother and daughter was extremely affecting, and a mournful interest is attached to it when we remember that it was the last time they were destined to meet.

"The whole population of Vienna thronged the streets to see her depart, mingling tears of genuine sorrow with their acclamations as they followed her carriage to the outermost gates of the city that they might gaze their last on the darling of many hearts."

At Strasbourg, the first French city to receive her, Marie Antoinette ceased to be German and became French. By the orders of Louis a magnificent pavilion was built at this place. It was superbly decorated, and divided into two compartments. In the first the youthful bride, after divesting herself of her German clothing and reattiring herself in costly vestments of French manufacture, bade farewell to her Austrian attendants; she then passed into the second division and received the French officers of her new household as a French Princess.

The celebrated German writer, Goethe, at the time pursuing his studies at Strasbourg, was present at the ceremony and he noticed what he considered a most inauspicious omen in the tapestry decoration of the chief saloon. "It represented the history of Jason and Medea, and the young poet could not avoid reflecting that a record of the most miserable union related in ancient mythology was an ill-omened ornament for nuptial festivities.

On quitting the pavilion, Marie Antoinette found in waiting the splendid carriages which had been expressly built for her at Paris. "They were marvels of the coachmaker's art; one, covered in crimson velvet, having pictures emblematical of the four seasons, embroidered in gold on the principal panels; on another the velvet was blue, with designs of the elements. On the roofs of each were nosegays of flowers carved in gold, enameled in appropriate colors, and wrought with such exquisite delicacy that every movement of the carriages, or even the lightest breeze, caused them to wave as if they were the natural produce of the garden."

Along the whole route the royal and lovely girl-bride received a most cordial and princely welcome. Proceeding by easy stages, she reached Compiegne on the 14th of May, where Louis XV. came to meet her, accompanied by the Dauphin, who was only a few months older than his bride, and whom she then saw for the first time.

On the 16th of May, the royal party having arrived at Versailles, the marriage ceremony was performed in the chapel of the palace by "the Primate of France, the Archbishop of Rheims. A canopy of a cloth of silver was held over the youthful pair, and after the Dauphin had placed the ring on the bride's finger, he added, as a token that he endowed her with all his worldly wealth, a gift of thirteen pieces of gold."

The wedding festivities were not free from several petty vexations, caused by the jealousy of court parasites, whose insolence toward the foolish and extravagant Louis XV. contributed so much to make him and his reign hateful and despicable in the eyes of the French people.

The numerous balls and banquets given in honor of the royal marriage were closed on the 30th of May by a magnificent display of fireworks which unfortunately terminated in one of the most dreadful catastrophes. The square in which the display was exhibited was crowded with pedestrians and carriages; all was excitement and admiration at the wonders displayed, when one of the explosions set fire to a portion of the platforms on which the designs of the different figures were constructed. In an instant the delight of the multitude was turned into the wildest terror; the uproar and the blaze made the horses unmanageable, and in a few moments animals and human beings were mingled in horrible confusion. At least 600 persons were supposed to have perished, and as many more to have been grievously injured.

The Dauphin and Dauphiness were greatly shocked at this terrible disaster, and the tender heart of the young bride not only moved her to give money toward the relief of the poorer families, but to visit many of them personally, so that they might feel the sweet balm of her loving sympathy and gentle speech. Many are the instances related of her generous interest in the misfortunes of others, especially of the poor. She won her way to all hearts. Even Louis XV., steeped as he was in his vices, praised her beauty and virtue in the hearing of his courtiers, exciting thereby the coarse jealousy of his infamous mistress, the Countess du Barri.

It seems little short of miraculous how so young and so lovely a girl managed to conduct herself with so much tact and dignity in such a vicious court. She was constantly surrounded by spies. Not even her writing-desk was safe from their prying eyes, and it was next to impossible for her and her husband to have any private conversation. Yet, in spite of all these irritating circumstances, she had the satisfaction of finding her pure and cheerful influence over the Dauphin rapidly increasing. There is abundant evidence to prove they both desired to promote the welfare of the French nation.

Just before the death of Louis XV., great distress existed in Paris, which the Dauphin and Dauphiness sought to relieve by "a munificent donation from their private purse." Immediately after they came to the French throne their very first edict was to announce that two taxes, called respectively "The gift of the happy accession" and "The girdle of the Queen," would not be imposed.

Disliking extremely the excessive etiquette of the Court of Versailles, it was only natural that the gay-hearted young Queen should sometimes long to escape from its trammels. Knowing this, her husband, now Louis XVI., gave her for her own use the celebrated "Little Trianon," situated about a mile from the Palace of Versailles on one side of the park. In this delightful retreat the innocent, sunny-tempered Marie Antoinette was wont to amuse herself, at one time feeding poultry, at another making bread, and anon busying herself in the garden. But even this charming spot was not sacred from the malice of her enemies, and some of her most innocent actions furnished food for slander.

As the years rolled on, and she gave no sign of becoming a mother, her husband's next-eldest brother, the Count de Provence, made no secret of his intentions in respect to the French crown. With all his kindness toward his beautiful consort, Louis XVI. was so phlegmatic in temperament, and so singularly devoid of passion, that he cannot be considered to have proved anything like a suitable guide and support to the brilliant, high-spirited Marie Antoinette. For one in his exalted position, his education had been shamefully neglected; thus all the worst and weakest faults in his character remained uncorrected, and in every crisis where decision, courage and graceful tact were demanded, an awkward timidity and inability to decide for himself were but too painfully apparent; and there can be no doubt that these serious defects largely contributed to bring about those terrible disasters which ended in the ruin and death of himself and his heroic wife.

Nine years elapsed ere Marie Antoinette had the joy of finding herself a mother, and during those years it is easy to believe that much of the levity and thoughtlessness laid to her charge was indulged in for the sake of subduing the painful feelings caused by her husband's coldness toward her, more especially as she saw that her continuing childless only served to make her husband's enemies all the more powerful.

Marie Antoinette was then in the full flower of her womanhood, and her beauty was the admiration of all beholders. "In words which will live as long as the English language," Burke has described the enthusiastic emotions she excited. It seemed to him "that surely never lighted on this orb, which she hardly seemed to touch, a more delightful vision."

Horace Walpole writes to Lady Ossory: "She is a statue of beauty, standing or sitting; grace itself when she moves." Madame Vigee le Brun, who painted her portrait, and who was in despair over the difficulty she experienced in doing justice to the remarkable brilliancy of Marie Antoinette's complexion, informs us that the Queen was "tall, admirably proportioned, fully developed, but not stout, superb arms, hands and feet small and perfectly formed. She had the finest carriage of any woman in France, carrying her head with a majesty that instantly marked the sovereign even in the midst of her court, yet without in any way detracting from the sweetness and pleasantness of her aspect. Her eyes were blue, soft and brilliant; nose good, and well chiseled; mouth not too large, with the full Austrian lips of her family. I never saw anything like her complexion, so exquisitely transparent. The last time I went to Fontainebleau, I saw her in full costume, covered with diamonds, and as the sun shone upon her she looked truly dazzling. Her head, supported by her lovely, swan-like neck, gave her in walking so majestic and imposing an air that she looked like a goddess in the midst of her nymphs."

Great was the joy of this wondrously beautiful woman when she gazed on her first-born, a daughter, who had the misfortune to undergo with her royal parents the horrors of the imprisonment in the Temple, and who became known in history as the Duchess d'Angouleme. Marie Antoinette's second child was a son, and a short time after his birth she proudly clasped him to her bosom with the most fervent thanksgiving, then resigning him to the nurse she said:

"Take him—he belongs to the state; but my daughter is still mine."

Alas, poor mother! she was then in blissful ignorance of the horrible fate in store for her and her royal house. For years the storm had been gathering which ultimately expended its overwhelming force in the horrors of the French Revolution. Singular to relate, the popular fury was chiefly directed toward the hapless Queen. The old animosity between the French and the Austrians appeared to blaze forth with redoubled strength, and the fact of her being an Austrian by birth was flung at her as if it had been a crime.

The insults and indignities heaped upon her during the cruel imprisonment in the Temple, and the hideous mockery of justice at the hands of the fanatical Jacobins at her so called trial, are a fearful revelation of the depths of fiendish barbarity to which human nature can sometimes fall. Her husband perished on the scaffold; her beloved son, "beautiful as an angel," and for whose life and crown she was prepared to face death itself, was torn from her protecting arms and consigned to a horrible fate at the hands of the brutal cobbler, Simon.

Nearly all her most devoted friends—simply because they were her friends—were sacrificed by the incensed rabble.

During the last four years of her life what heroism she displayed. How great was her faith in the justice of the French people. How nobly she strove, though in vain, to animate her husband on several critical occasions with her own courageous spirit and gracious tact; thinking, and perhaps not altogether wrongly—that things would not have come to such a fearful pass if Louis had but bravely looked his difficulties in the face. With what fortitude she set herself "to think for all, to act for all, to struggle for all; and to bear up against the conviction that her thoughts and actions and struggles were balked of their effect by the very persons for whom she was exerting herself."

Bereft of every hope, separated from every soul she loved, her once-brilliant and beautiful countenance faded and worn through suffering, her eyes dimmed and shrunken from endless weeping, her hair whitened, not by years, but by unspeakable sorrow, the "Niobe of Monarchy" laid her head under the executioner's knife on the morning of the 19th of October 1793, and in a few seconds her deeply-afflicted soul was at rest evermore.

Late Fashion Notes.

New French dresses are exceedingly short in the skirt.

Scorched spots, if not too deep, may be removed by laying them in the sun.

Muslin embroidery is seen upon new bonnets of Parisian make.

Turkey-red calico dresses for children, made in Mother Hubbard style, and trimmed with Medici lace, are very fashionably worn for morning dresses at the seashore.

White or sprigged muslin round hats, shirred into shape over the milliner's reeds, and trimmed with flots of satin ribbon and cascades of fancy lace, are worn with light summer toilets in town and country.

Pointed shoes of velvet, matching in shape the laced ones of kid now seen upon the promenade, have the toes covered with an embroidery of gold and silver beads. They are laced over the instep with gold or silver cords.

Faille is very largely employed this season, and is usually combined with other materials in the construction of stylish costumes, Pompadour satin, shot silks, moire, silk gauze, or grenadine being the other fabrics usually selected.

Fichus of the finest white linen, simply hemstitched around the edges, are worn over morning toilets of foulard, muslin, cashmere, or vigogne, by the few women whose complexions can bear the test of so severe a style of neck-dressing.

The coquille ruche is formed by several plaits turned each way, so as to form a box-plait in the center. The upper and lower edges of this ruche are sewn together in the center, causing the other plaits to set out in a fan or shell shape, as the name coquille denotes.

Very young girls now tie the hair which they draw away from the forehead and temples very high upon the crown of their heads, fastening it there with a bright satin ribbon. These flowing locks are then left to fall with the back hair in a wavy shower over their shoulders.

Pale sea-green silk dresses of the most artistic and æsthetic hue, or tint rather, nearly covered with white lace ruffles, panniers, and bertha of lace to match, draped over the bodice, are to be very fashionably worn at summer evening dancing parties this season.

Moire this season very seldom forms the whole of a costume. It is only used in combination with other materials, such as satin, foulard, taffetas, lawn, silk, or cashmere. It quite frequently forms the skirt or bodice, the other portions of the toilet being of a contrasting material, or it is frequently employed for facings, collar, sash, pelerine, cuffs, and vest, in the formation of a new costume or the renovation of one of a past season.

Many summer bonnets, following the style of the "Langtry" bonnet, have the crowns completely covered with broad loops of satin ribbon. One pretty gipsy bonnet in this fashion is made of white cactus-lace straw, the brim being covered with a passementerie of white pearl beads. The crown is covered with broad, flat loops of cream-white satin ribbon. Inside the bonnet is faced with pale lilac surah, and the strings, which tie at the left side, are of white satin, lined with lilac.

Many of the new gimps, olives, cordelieres, and frogs, now stylishly worn in the place of buttons to close the dress in front, have chenille introduced into them with pleasing effect. Some of these have cords of two or three contrasting shades of color, and thus furnish a very tasteful and elegant accessory to a plain dress of neutral tint, requiring no additional coloring to light it up. The latest hand-made fourrageres and passementerie loops very much resemble rich embroidery when laid over velvet, satin, or cloth.

Among the innovations of modern fashion, one of the oldest is the wearing of velvet throughout the summer. There is this season an infinite variety of velvets—plain, openwork, plaided, striped, beaded, moired, flowered, and a number of novel devices in dark Oriental colorings. The plain black Lyons velvet is, however, the most favored. The new English brand of velveteen, known as the "Louis" silk-face pile, is finding a very large sale in America, as it is much used for underskirts and for children's dresses.—N. Y. Evening Post.

A "Sell."

A good deal of harmless enjoyment and amusement may often be derived from what is commonly known as a "sell." I am at a loss to discover any more orthodox word to convey my meaning. I must, therefore, stick to the old expression of "sell." One of the oldest and best-known anecdotes calculated to produce this pleasing effect is that of the young guardsman returning from the Crimean war, who rubbed his hands with glee on board ship, and, in so doing, rubbed off a ring presented to him by his inamorata, which fell into the sea. His position was an awkward one, as she had vowed she would never marry him if he lost that ring. The story goes that, on his arrival in England, he was eating some fish at dinner, when he suddenly felt something hard in his mouth. He removed it, and what do you think it was? If the story has been well told, the audience are sure to reply, as with one voice: "The ring!" Your rejoinder is: "No! only a fishbone."—Whitehall Review.

INDIANA has a law to prevent weak-minded persons marrying. A crusty bachelor insinuates that the weak-minded are the only persons who ever think of doing such a thing.

FOUR-LEAVED CLOVER.

"If one find a four-leaf clover"
(She said, sitting on the grass)
"He can wish whate'er he likes to—
And that wish shall come to pass."

"Do you say so?" Then, down kneeling
'Mong the sorrel and crept grass,
Looked I for a four-leaf clover
And my wish to come to pass.

Long I searched among the sorrel.
Close beside me she searched, too;
Now and then some commonplaces
Broke the silence—but it grew.

For my heart was full of yearning,
And my mouth of eager words,
But I dared not give them utterance—
So I hearkened to the birds;

And kept looking, looking, looking,
While beside me she looked, too—
Two bent figures in the twilight,
Green hills paling into blue.

"Ha! I have one!" "Yes, and wished for?"—
"You! and shall it be?" I cried.
Eyes cast down, she asked, demurely:
"Hath the clover not replied?"
—Houghton's "Niagara and Other Poems."

The Potato Scarcity.

Notwithstanding the fact that there is a promise of an excellent potato crop this year all over the country the prices of potatoes are higher now than they have been for years. During the past week there was an advance of nearly one hundred per cent. over the prices asked the week before, and potatoes that brought four dollars a barrel at wholesale now sell for seven dollars, and even more. The fact that large quantities of potatoes are now brought to New York from Long Island does not seem in any way to affect the price. The inconsistency between the receipts of potatoes from all points and the prices they bring has given rise to the suspicion that there is a strong speculative interest in potatoes that has succeeded in creating a corner. The suspicion has not been diminished by a rumor to the effect that thousands of dollars' worth of potatoes have been thrown into the North and East Rivers by interested persons. Mr. John Sutherland, among others, is strongly inclined to give credence to this rumor, and even goes so far as to say he knows it to be true, and Mr. Sutherland is not apt to speak without book. Dock Commissioner Vanderpoel, when asked about the dumping of potatoes in the river and bay, said that such a thing could scarcely be done without the Dock Department's knowledge of the fact; and the Commissioners had not been notified that potatoes had been thrown into the waters of the harbor. He believed, therefore, the rumor was without foundation. But he could give no other reason for his belief.

Many produce-dealers were visited by the reporter. None of them were inclined to admit that there was any truth in the report that potatoes had been wilfully destroyed for the sake of creating a corner in the market. They said that it would be next to impossible to bring the market up much higher than it now is. Last season's drought was especially severe upon food staples. Fortunately, however, Europe had raised a surplus of the vegetables the supply of which failed in the United States, and large shipments were at once made and continued during the fall and winter. Nearly all kinds of vegetables, including cabbages, turnips, beets and cauliflowers, came over, but the most useful and important were beans and potatoes. The following is a statement of the monthly imports of potatoes from October, 1881, and of arrivals till June 1, 1882:

	Great Britain, Sacks.	Continent, Sacks.	Total, Sacks.
October............	5,519	1,055	6,574
November.........	10,148	8,334	18,482
December.........	15,656	9,281	24,937
Total............	31,323	18,670	44,993
1882.
January............	23,434	620	24,054
February..........	187,705	12,446	200,151
March..............	363,671	9,051	372,722
April................	393,059	15,254	408,313
May..................	77,080	2,144	79,224
Total..........	1,076,273	58,185	1,129,457

Arrivals of potatoes still continue from Europe, but in a greatly diminished quantity, only about 6,100 sacks having been received during the past month. In addition to this, the old crop of American potatoes, which was originally short, is now used up, and there is not enough of the new crop to supply the deficiency. These seem to be the conditions that account for the present high price of potatoes, and the difficulty will be removed as soon as large supplies of new potatoes begin to accumulate. Until then it is safe to predict very high prices.

Mr. William Gamble, a prominent produce dealer, said: "There has been no forced corner in potatoes, so far as I know. The lack of supply could not be helped. There were no potatoes to supply the demand, and of course the prices went up. So soon as the new supply begins to come in you will see a tumble in prices. The crop is a large one, but it is late. I don't believe in speculators throwing potatoes overboard to bull the market. Some time ago two cargoes of spoiled potatoes were brought here, and the Board of Health refused to allow them to be landed. They were then dumped in the lower bay. That may have given rise to this rumor. How else it originated I cannot say. You can take my word for it, there has been no corner except such as has been made by the lateness of the new and the exhaustion of the old crop of potatoes.—N. Y. World.

Harness.

How often does it happen to see farmers working their horses to wagons, plows, or carts, with harness so ill-fitting, tattered and patched, that the sight at once illicits pity from any human person? For such neglect there is no excuse, as the amount of harness necessary for plowing is so small that only the most careless and slovenly farmer has any excuse to offer. Wagon and cart harness are more elaborate and complicated, yet even they are simple enough to be manufactured at home, if certain portions are purchased at the saddlers, such as buckles, rings, traces and hames. Collars, best suited to our Southern climate, are made of shucks; these are easily procured, there being many persons in every neighborhood who are very adept in making them, and when made to fit, are smooth, and with them the shoulders never become chafed, and being so cheap, can be replaced as often as necessary.

Nothing betokens a poor improvident farmer sooner than slouchy harness, to say nothing of the damage they inflict upon their poor dumb brutes. When an animal is required to labor, the owner should compare his case to theirs. For instance, how would a man like to follow a plow all day with shoes which pinched his feet, or which had a rock in them? Yet he would not suffer any more than the animal with a collar too small, or a back-band which galled his back, or one trace shorter than the other; but unfortunately there are too many who apparently care nothing for these details, though in attending to them depends in a great degree their success.

On well regulated farms there is attached to each barn or stable a harness-room, where after being used, the harness is carefully hung upon pegs, there to remain until wanted; when a rainy day comes, then it is overhauled, mended and oiled. By this means, they not only last longer, but are more comfortable for the horses, and are proofs of a thrifty management. When harness is purchased complete, cheapness is not always a wise consideration, because a good set made of well-tanned leather, properly put together, will in careful hands outlast two or three of the flimsy made ones.—Southern Industries.

A marriage at Cobb, Wis., was between a widow, aged 72, and her adopted son, aged 23. Her first husband had on his death bed advised the match as a means of preventing the raising of certain legal questions regarding his estate.

Miss Kreuger carried a gun to the wedding of Gottleib Summers, at Canton, Ohio, and, after the husband and wife had retired for the night, fired into their bedroom through a window. Her excuse was that she ought to have been the bride.

As with the school, so with the paper. You pay your subscription price at the counting-room; you can acquire the right to be served with a copy; all that is commercial you can buy. But you do not own the paper. You did not start it. You cannot stop it. You can learn from it if it is a teacher; you can be influenced by it if it is an advocate; and you can love it if it is a companion. But though you read it every day, and fill yourselves with its ample contents, it comes back again on the morrow freshly burdened with its wealth of thought and information. This is the newspaper.—New Haven Register.

Lieut. Willard Young, a son of Brigham Young, is a teacher of engineering at West Point. A Salt Lake correspondent says: "He was at West Point when his father's estate was being settled up, and when the litigation began his agents wrote to him to know what they should do. He replied that he din't care about quarrelling over the matter; that he had a profession that would give him a living, and that he would take what the others din't want. So a lot of railroad stock, supposed to be nearly worthless, was assigned to him. He took it, and the development of the Territory has since made him one of the richest of the old man's heirs." He is now in Utah on his wedding trip.

Latest Election Count.

The official vote by counties for Superintendent of Education gives Armstrong, Democrat, 104,170, and Wood, Independent, 47,133. Armstrong's majority 57,037. About one third of the voters of the Sate did not go to the polls. The counties giving Wood a majority are Choctaw 103, Elmore 67, Lawrence 402, Madison 591, Walker 126, Winston 120. The vote of Baldwin county has not yet been counted but it is known that the Independents carry it by a small majority. As there was little "scratching" done, the above will approximate the vote for the whole ticket,

The next Legislature will stand: In the Senate, Democrats 30, Independents 2. In the House, Democrats 78, Independents 21. Madison county sends the only negro elected.

Reform Needed.

The result of the recent election in this State, in which a number of counties elected opposition representatives, is the cause of considerable comment on the part of the press of the State. One paper declares that these counties, most of which are situated north of the black belt, voted as they did from the fact that as they have never felt the ills of negro domination, and are in no danger in this respect, the term "radicalism" has not the terrible meaning with them, which it has in the counties south of them. Another paper attributes the result to apathy on the part of the Democracy, while another says that our election law and convict system had more to do with the defeat of the Democracy in those counties than anything else.

Whatever may have been the causes of the opposition successes in these few counties, the people of the entire State have reason to congratulate themselves that their government is to continue in the hands of those best fitted for its administration, men who have been elected by the Democratic party. While in turn, the Democratic party has, in the reverses in what was once a Democratic stronghold, good reason for looking into the causes of such reverses, and of remedying defects and instituting reforms which will prevent further disintegration.

Reform has been loudly called for by the press and upon the stump, and the Democratic party will suffer if the voice is unheeded. The present election law has already born bitter fruit, in giving grounds for the unseating of several of our Democratic congressmen elect, the school law needs revision, the convict system looking after, and perhaps other reforms are needed. It is to be hoped that, for the perpetuation of the good name of the State, that all reform movements before the next Legislature, may receive that candid and impartial consideration which will justify a non-partisan action in the premises, and which will result in giving us laws less liable to censure.

Alabama Views.

Bro. Rogers, of the Gainesville Reporter, is said to be the Jumbo of the Gainesville base ball club. John must have commenced growing in his old age.

Young and charming Bro. C. Roderick McCall, of the Greenville Advocate, has seen fit to give the View man several "slams," of late. As he missed us last week, we presume his health is improving.

Montgomery is anxious to have another cotton factory. We hope she will, as her prosperity demands just such enterprises, and if she ever expects to become a city she should be moving.

The Legislature will never find a better year to repeal the crop lien law than this. The whole State has made overwhelming crops of grain and food supplies, and will not have any necessity to seek advances of bread next year.—Selma Times.

Editor Crawford, of the Eutaw Mirror, who was elected to the Legislature from Greene county over one of the regular nominees, is a sound Democrat, and we expect to see him leading in all the reform movements before the next House.

An uprising of negroes in Choctaw county, who had in vogue a plot to massacre the entire white population of the county, was checked by the arrest of the ring leaders one day last week, and the hanging of the chief of the ring on Saturday, by about 700 citizens, 150 of whom were negroes.

A Republican newspaper is shortly to be established in Montgomery, which will be the organ of that party during the Congressional canvass. It would be well if such an institution should become a fixture in this State, as its criticisms would prove beneficial to the Democracy in more ways than one.

There has lately been established in Montgomery an agricultural paper, and the capital city can boast of a number of other excellent journals, among which are the Ala. Progress, and the Temperance Herald, the latter of which has lately been enlarged. We hope all may be well sustained, as they deserve to be.

The cosy little city of Eutaw, over among the fertile prairies of West Alabama, is coming out as the "live town" of that section, judging from the number of public enterprises lately set on foot by her citizens. The Agricultural and Mechanical Association of West Alabama has been reorganized and will hold forth there in a grand fair in November.

Gen. C. M. Shelley was re-nominated for Congress in the fourth district, on Tuesday, by the convention which met in Selma for the purpose of placing a Democratic candidate in the field. He is to make the race, also, for the unexpired term to fill the vacancy caused by his being ousted by a Republican majority.

The formation of a new county with Pineapple as the county site, out of portions of the counties of Dallas, Wilcox, Monroe, Lowndes and Butler, is being agitated. The Selma Times very selfishly favors the project from the fact that Dallas will not lose anything from the thirty square miles to be taken from her territory. With the exception of Monroe, Dallas is better able than any of the counties named, to make concessions of territory for the purpose.

The utter incapacity of the average negro for intelligently performing the duties of a citizen is a fact as unquestionable as it is deplorable. The following from the Union Springs Herald adds another to the proofs that the republican party committed a grave blunder and a political crime when it made Cuffee a voter: "A prominent republican was complaining on the street yesterday that a number of misguided (?) colored men had voted the democratic ticket, which was printed at the Herald office with green ink, thinking it was the greenback ticket which they had been commanded to support. Such is political life where the voter is too grossly ignorant to properly exercise the elective franchise."—Greenville Advocate.

The Bureau of Statistics has just issued its annual report, showing the total immigration to the United States for the year ending June 30, 1882. Its first and most notable feature has reference to the enormous propotions which this foreign influx has assumed. The total immigration for the current year amounts to 789,003, or 119,572 more than last year, when the highest total was reached ever known in the history of this country. Some idea of the relative amount of this foreign addition to our population may be gathered by the statement that four years of such increase would aggregate a number equal to the total population of the United States at the time of the Revolution—a population which had required one hundred and fifty years to reach.

Verbena Views.

"The Verbena Male and Female Academy," has assumed a shape, in its progress, which enables your correspondent to form a pretty correct idea as to what it will be when completed. The frame is up and the weatherboarding nearly finished. It stands about 60x30 with a ten foot passage between the rooms which are, each, 23x30. It is located, south of the depot, on an elevated site, immediately opposite the M. E. Church building. The grounds slope gently away from the Academy in every direction, except the front, and when covered with green sward, will make a delightful arena for youthful sports during the hours of playtime and recreation. It will be a two-story-building. I have not heard of a single application to run the Hotel, but, of several to run the Academy.

The Hotel! With what intense interest has the progress of this grand structure been watched! Every man, woman and child in Verbena feels an interest in it. All seem to realize the fact that, in some way, it is connected with the general happiness and welfare of our thriving village. "What a large, fine building for so small a place." "I wonder what it will cost." "The windows are too small." The circles in the banistering of the veranda are too large." "The children can creep through." "No family, with small children will be willing to board in it." These are some of the many remarks daily heard about our hotel. All concur in its magnificence, yet, there is no one but what would have had it a little different from what it is. One of the stockholders was asked what color it would be painted, he replied that if painted to correspond with his feelings, the color would be "blue."

The health of our community is good. Too much rain for cotton. Worms have been seen near by.

Our merchants are enlarging their stocks and preparing for a big business next fall and winter. OCCASIONAL.

Puscrip jest let Me no wen tu be thar and We ull be thar

The above encouraging missive reached our office on Monday. We will not publish the name of the author, but as he seems to mean business, place in its stead three small daggers, though perhaps a skull and cross bones would be more appropriate. We shall certainly call on our valiant friend in case of need, and as he is already quite proficient in the use of the editorial "we." we intend as soon as possible to make him one of the permanent attaches of this office. Let all take warning.

Man's Humanity to Man.

Mr. J. P. Webb, who has charge of our county jail, has for four years been suffering with mercurial cancer of the leg. Dr. J. P. Robinson took his case some two months ago, and has placed him on the road to recovery. This has been done at great expense to Dr. Robinson, who from a spirit of benevolence, took charge of the case after several other physicians had given it up as incurable. Dr. Robinson has snatched Mr. Webb from death's door at great expense to himself, and considering the pecuniary condition of the patient and the position which Dr. Robinson occupies as county health officer, he should certainly be compensated by the county for his work, and should not by any means be allowed to bear the expense alone. We would call the attention of the board of commissioners to this matter.

Twenty American cities, in the census year, had a population of at least 100,000 each; ten, namely New York. Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Chicago, Boston, St. Louis, Baltimore, Cincinnati, San Francisco, and New Orleans, in the order named, had a population of over 200,000 each; of these the first seven had over 300,000, and the first four over 500,000. New York stood alone with her million and a quarter; but before the next census Philadelphia will join her, giving the country two cities with more than a million inhabitants each. Meanwhile the contiguous cities of New York, Brooklyn, Jersey City, and Hoboken possess an aggregate population of over two millions.

Maj. John L. Harrell will remove with his family from Verbena to Clanton. They will be warmly welcomed. Maj. H. will establish a lumber agency here.

Conductor Phil. Tooley is rusticating in Clanton. Mrs. Tooley is spending the summer here.

Maplesville dots are crowded out this week.

The Clanton Camp Meeting will commence September the 6th, and will be conducted on the self-supporting plan. Several families will camp on the ground, and persons who cannot tent are invited to attend and give assistance in maintaining the meeting. Ministerial aid solicited. Provision will be made to entertain ministers who may be in attendance.

A negro man, Charley Love, was arrested near town, on last Sunday, and has been placed in jail to await trial. He is charged with the killing of another negro, Greene Oden, who was murdered by unknown parties about three years ago. Love will have a preliminary examination before Judge Callen next Monday.

Places for Things.

"A place for everything and everything in its place," is an adage familiar to us all and full of wisdom. But to keep "everything in its place" one must have a place for everything, and this it is not always easy to hav . Many houses are built with a lamentable want of closets, for closets are expensive in room, material and labor. In planning a house they are frequently, if not generally, an after-thought, and are thrown in where space for them can best be afforded. When women plan their own houses there will be ample allowance of closet room. If one has plenty of money, cabinets, wardrobes, chests, can be bought that are at once ornamental and useful, and form part of the furnishing, but the main dependence of the average housekeeper must be closets. These when furnished with shelves, drawers and rows of hooks, are an unspeakable comfort and convenience to the order-loving housewife. In city houses where everything is constructed with a view to economy in space, we often find them, but in the average country house very rarely.

So there must be recourse to bureaus, boxes, bags, chests and improvised closets. The last may be constructed wherever there is space to put a shelf, and may be of the size of the shelf in length and width. Hooks screwed into the bottom of the shelf will serve to hang garments on, and a curtain may be hung on rods fastened to the shelf. A valance tacked above the rods on the shelf will form a more complete protection from dust than the curtain alone. In many rooms [illegible] can be [illegible] into a triangular or a rectangular closet, as suits the fancy or convenience. Weights sewed into the hem of the curtain will keep it in place. Goods boxes make very useful closets, for kitchen or cellar use. Shelves may be put in them, and the covers, hinged properly, serve as doors. With a covering of paper or a coat of paint they may be made not unpleasing to the eye. Shoe-boxes, used by shoe-packers, are very useful as substitutes for closet-room. The covers should be hinged to the box, and these neatly upholstered, to form a pleasant seat. Furniture calico fastened around them in ruffles or folds conceal the angles and the wood, and converts utility into beauty. Room can readily be found for these, and they fill the places of chairs or lounges quite well. Soap boxes and candle boxes and starch boxes make very convenient receptacles for small articles if they have covers hinged on, and are lined with paper and covered on the outside with pictures or calico pasted on. A couple of hinges, less than a dozen screws, a little time, taste and odd pieces of paper or cloth, may be made to transform an ugly box into a thing of useful comeliness.

Bags in every variety are needed by the housekeeper. A stout piece of nice bagging makes a good clothes-bag; and an end of rope should be sewed into the hem, so the top of the bag may always be hospitably open. One of these hung in every bed-room is indispensable, and makes the gathering of clothes for the weekly washing a very easy matter. Shoe-bags are a great convenience, and can be made so as to hold one or a dozen pairs of shoes, and keep them from gathering dust and mould in closet corners, beside preventing the vexation of hunting them up when wanted. Scrap-bags are a necessity, and may be made very ornamental by the exercise of taste. They are indispensable in every room in the house. Instead of bags, baskets or jars may be used, and these can be made handsome by the exercise of skill and taste.

Wall-pockets and brackets are very great conveniences where one lacks closet room and shelf room. The former may be made of splints or pasteboard covered with cloth and trimmed with cord and embroidery. A wall-pocket with many compartments tacked on the inside of a closet door may serve many valuable purposes, especially where there is a family of children and a great many things "lying round." A label on each pocket will help keep things in the right place, and prevent the shoe-laces from getting mixed with the calico pieces or the knitting work.

It takes time to create places to put things in, and it takes time to keep them in place, but not more time than it takes to hunt them up when they may be anywhere and everywhere and belong nowhere. The satisfaction of knowing that at a moment's notice, in the middle of the night or in broad daylight, one can put her hand on whatever in her domain is called for, is a great satisfaction to the orderly housekeeper, and one which she will contrive one way or another not to be without.—N. Y. Tribune.

How to Capture a Muskallonge.

"There is a knack in fishing, as there is in everything else," said the merchant, with some complacency. "Very few people can capture a muskallonge. You must let the line drag until it catches. Then draw it in for twenty feet and the hook will clear the bottom at the right distance to attract the muskallonge."

"How do such great fish act when they take the bait?"

"They rear up and pull like steers," said the merchant; "but give 'em the line a little taut—give 'em all they want of it. Pretty soon the muskallonge will turn and rush to the boat with full speed. Then draw in the line, watching the fish's motion, humoring him, playing him just as he will. At last you'll have him under the boat."

"It must be difficult to land a muskallonge?"

"Very, unless you know how. When the fish is brought to the side of the boat, the oars are unshipped and the rower, putting his hand in the water, must rub the muskallonge gently from tail to head against the scales. He will become as quiet as a purring cat. Never stir a fin until taken out of his native element!"

"You astonish me! What is the strange influence that quiets the fish? Is it mesmeric?"

"I dunno," answered the merchant. "it's a fact. I lost many a big fish before I heard of the stroking process. Now I can catch 'em every time!"—Cor. Detroit Free Press.

Jimmy Brown Tells an "Old, Old Story."

We've had a most awful time in our house. There have been ever so many robberies in town, and everybody has been almost afraid to go to bed.

The robbers broke into old Dr. Smith's house one night. Dr. Smith is one of those doctors that don't give any medicine except cold water, and he heard the robbers and came down stairs in his nightgown, with a big umbrella in his hand, and said. "If you don't leave this minute I'll shoot you." And the robbers they said: "Oho! that umbrella isn't loaded!" and they took him and tied his hands and feet, and put a mustard plaster over his mouth, so that he couldn't yell, and then they filled the washtub with water and made him sit down in it, and told him that now he'd know how it was himself, and went away and left him, and he nearly froze to death before morning.

Father wasn't a bit afraid of the robbers, but he said he'd fix something so that he would wake up if they got in the house. So he put a coal-scuttle full of coal about half-way up the stairs, and tied a string across the upper hall just at the head of the stairs. He said that if a robber tried to come up stairs he would upset the coal-scuttle, and make a tremendous noise, and that if he did happen not to upset it, he would certainly fall over the string at the top of the stairs. He told us that if we heard the coal-scuttle go off in the night, Sue and mother and I were to open the windows and scream, while he got up and shot the robber.

The first night, after father had fixed everything nicely for the robbers, he went to bed, and then mother told him that she had forgotten to lock the back door. So father he said: "Why can't women sometimes remember something," and he got up and started to go down stairs in the dark. He forgot all about the string, and fell over it with an awful crash, and then began to fall down stairs. When he got half-way down he met the coal-scuttle, and that went down the rest of the way with him, and you never in your life heard anything like the noise the two of them made. We opened our windows and cried murder and fire and thieves, and some men that were going by rushed in and picked father up, and would have taken him off to jail, he was that dreadfully black, if I hadn't told them who he was.

But this was not the awful time that I mentioned when I began to write, and if I don't begin to tell you about it, I shan't have any room left on my paper. Mother gave a dinner party last Thursday. There were ten ladies and twelve gentlemen, and one of them was that dreadful Mr. Martin with the cork leg, and other improvements, as Mr. Travers calls them. Mother told me not to let her see me in the dining-room, or she'd let me know; and I meant to mind, only I forgot, and went into the dining-room, just to look at the table, a few minutes before dinner.

I was looking at the raw oysters, when Jane—that's the girl that waits on the table—said: "Run, Master Jimmy; here's your mother coming." Now I hadn't time to run, so I just dived under the table, and thought I'd stay there for a minute or two, until mother went out of the room again.

It wasn't only mother that came, but the whole company, and they sat down to dinner without giving me any chance to get out. I tell you it was a dreadful situation. I had only room enough to sit still, and nearly every time I moved I hit somebody's foot. Once I tried to turn around, and while I was doing it I hit my head against the table so hard that I thought I had upset something, and was sure that people would know I was there. But fortunately everybody thought that somebody else had joggled, so I escaped for that time.

It was awfully tiresome waiting for those people to get through dinner. It seemed as if they could never eat enough, and when they were not eating they were all talking at once. It taught me a lesson against gluttony, and nobody will ever find me sitting for hours at the dinner table. Finally I made up my mind that I must have some amusement, and as Mr. Martin's cork leg was close by me, I thought I would have some fun with that.

There was a big darning-needle in my pocket, that I kept there in case I should want to use it for anything. I happened to think that Mr. Martin couldn't feel anything that was done to his cork leg, and that it would be great fun to drive the darning-needle into it and leave the end sticking out, so that people who didn't know that his leg was cork would see it, and think that he was suffering dreadfully, only he didn't know it. So I got out the needle, and jammed it into his leg with both hands, so that it would go in good and deep.

Mr. Martin gave a yell that made my hair run cold, and sprang up, and nearly upset the table, and fell over his chair backward, and wasn't there a circus in that dining-room! I had made a mistake about the leg, and run the needle into his real one.

I was dragged out from under the table, and — But I needn't say what happened to me after that. It was "the old, old story," as Sue says when she sings a foolish song about getting up at five o'clock in the morning—as if she'd ever been awake at that time in her whole life!—Harper's Young People.

—One of the most eminent German medical men is reported as saying that there are not less, probably, than 10,000 persons in Germany who have become slaves to the habit of hypodermically injecting morphine. There are many who take as much as eighteen injections every day. Some have hardly a square inch of skin on their bodies which is not marked by scars produced by this practice. Slaves of this habit are even more hopelessly enchained than those who take opium in other ways, and it is speedier destruction.—St. Louis Globe.

The Supply of Ivory Failing.

"Within fifty years there will not be an elephant left in Africa, and the supply of ivory will be exhausted." This interesting announcement was made by the largest importer of ivory in the country. No man who has ever struck a billiard-ball, and no woman who has ever touched a piano key, will fail to inquire the reasons for this prediction, and it is natural to inquire if a substitute can not be discovered for so important a material. Celluloid has been introduced recently to take the place of ivory, and is being extensively used in the manufacture of many articles, but it is said that it can never give satisfaction where endurance and nicety of form are required.

"The best looking billiard-ball I ever saw," said the dealer, was made out of paper. As far as I could see it would answer the purpose for which it was made, but the practiced billiardist will not use it. He will tell you that he will use only ivory balls, no other material has the 'click,' the elasticity, the rebound. Celluloid and other compositions are being employed in the manufacture of cheap articles; but as yet no substance has been discovered that can be considered in any perfect sense a substitute for ivory." In this view of the case the exhaustion of the supply of ivory becomes a matter of general public concern. For ivory is used in the construction of a long list of articles in constant use, such as knife-handles, combs, ornamental carved work, harness trimmings, chess-men, dice, cane-heads, billiard balls, piano-keys, knobs, etc.

"It could hardly be expected that with the immense and increasing consumption of the world the supply of ivory could hold out, especially when it is remembered that one elephant produces but two tusks, of an average weight of seventy pounds each, and that to obtain these the elephant must be killed. In consequence of the enormous demand for ivory, elephants have been destroyed with great rapidity of late years, and it appears to be only a matter of time when they will be exterminated. From a very early period elephants have been sacrificed for the sake of the ivory. The Greeks made it a most important article, and sculptors of Greece used it in constructing statues. It was also exclusively used by the Romans, who introduced it throughout Europe. Their source of supply is Africa, as ours is. The Indian elephant produces short tusks of little value, as far as the amount and quality of the ivory is concerned. Most of the elephants in the traveling menageries and circuses are imported from India, and all the elephants, Jumbo included, in Barnum's 'greatest show on earth,' do not possess, probably, over $100 worth of ivory. The source of supply is limited to Africa, and for certain kinds of ivory to Eastern Africa. The ivory from the west coast is darker and harder, and for some things is preferable; but, as a rule, the best ivory comes from the east coast. That is to say, it used to come from the east coast; it now comes from the interior. In 1850 I was in Zanzibar, and at that time elephants could be shot near the coast, but now they have been driven far into the interior, and expeditions have to be fitted out for long journeys inland, where tusks are purchased from the natives. The natives kill all the elephants; white men take no hand in that branch of the work. And here let me state a curious fact. Long as I have been dealing in ivory it is probable that I never saw two tusks from the same elephant. This is explained by the custom prevailing among the native tribes of presenting one tusk from every elephant to the chief, who, of course, may sell his share; but the tusks in this way get separated. Every year the elephant is being driven further into the interior. Indeed, ivory after being carried to the coast on the backs of the negroes becomes a very expensive article. When I was there in 1850 ivory was worth $1 a pound; now the price is $3 a pound."

Mr. Arnold states that what was true of the east coast was also true of Cape Town and the west coast. The elephants have been driven far from the sea, and have taken up their abode in the unexplored regions of the dark continent. Perhaps the desire for ivory will be a stronger motive for the exploration of these regions than either science or religion has been. But Mr. Arnold thinks that, judging from the past, in fifty years the elephant will have been exterminated in Africa, and this motive for exploration will have ceased to exist.

Ivory is every year becoming more scarce. Only about half the quantity has reached the English market this year that reached it in the corresponding period of last year. The total stock in London does not exceed sixty tons, a very small amount compared with the quantity that once was carried. The importation into the United States for the year ending June 30, 1881, amounted to $703,087, in 1880 to $679,460, in 1879 to $461,209. But there is a larger increase in the value than in the quantity. The Government reports do not state the quantity imported. The supply, however, is in no degree equal to the demand; all that is imported goes into immediate consumption, and very little remains in stock. Mr. Arnold, in showing the World reporter about 5,000 pounds of ivory in the cellar of his warehouse, said that was probably the largest stock in the country, except at the mills. He has known the time when there were 50,000 pounds in the cellar, when it was packed from floor to ceiling. Once there was a keen competition to obtain custom; now importers will sell only to a few selected mills, and importers find it impossible to get hold of the ivory. Once a London speculator named Moses used to purchase three or four hundred tons and endeavor to create a corner in the market, but such a transaction would be impossible now.

The price of ivory has advanced 50 per cent. in the last ten years. So expensive has it become that the greatest care is taken that no waste occur in the manufacture. In making billiard balls, for instance, only that portion of the solid tusk of about the required size—2 1-2 inches in diameter—is used. If it is necessary to use a larger piece, a ring for a harness will perhaps be turned out of the remainder. Billiard balls are, therefore, very expensive. Mr. Arnold showed the reporter a magnificent tusk weighing 132 pounds, and nearly all solid. This is as heavy as tusks are obtained now, though formerly it was not uncommon to receive them weighing over 180 pounds. As said before, the average weight now is 70 pounds.—N. Y. World.

Why Write Only on One Side.

There are several reasons why manuscript for the printer should not be written on both sides of the paper. The chief one, and a sufficient one if there were no other, is that it is often necessary, or at least best, particularly in a newspaper composing or type-setting room, for the foreman to divide the "copy," or manuscript, into small portions, called "takes," each including not more than a printer's stickful of matter, and "pay it out," that is, deliver it to a number of compositors, or type setters, in different parts of the room. A stick is an iron gauge set to the width measure of the column to be filled, in which the compositor sets his type. A stickful will fill about two inches in length in the column. A closely written page of letter-paper will make from one and a half to three stickfuls, or takes. If the paper is written on one side only, the foreman can cut the page into the proper number of takes, numbering them as he pays them out to compositors, so as to insure the proper arrangement of the matter when it is brought together again after these different persons have set it in type. But, if the manuscript is written on both sides, such division of it into takes, if not impossible, is at least much more difficult, and apt to lead to confusion and delay, or to blunders mortifying to writer, editor, and printers. But it is not only the printer who is embarrassed; the proof reader, who has to read the proofs by copy, is put to extra trouble. If printers are ever profane, they are apt to betray this weakness when they get a piece of copy written on both sides of the paper. Christian contributors and all sound moralists should bear this in mind. It frequently happens, in the printing offices of the great dailies, that, after all the rest of the paper is in type, several columns of telegrams, or other special matter, are sent in just before the last form is ready to go to press. To avoid delay, this matter is divided into four or five line takes and distributed among forty or fifty compositors; whereas, if such matter came written on both sides of the paper, such rapid dispatch would be impracticable. These reasons are sufficient to justify the editorial rule under consideration.

—Color the fence the same shade as the dwelling, or light brown, or fawn color. The dark maroon trimmings have a somewhat tawdry appearance, and we would prefer them of the same color as the house or but slightly darker. We would not make the front yard into a sort of pen, with a picket fence around it, but, if a fence is necessary, would extend the yard on at least three sides of the house, or, much better, on all four sides; otherwise its ornamental appearance is one-sided.—Country Gentleman.

THE WIDDER BUDD.

BY EUGENE J. HALL.

I'm fifty, I'm fair, an' without a gray hair,
An' I feel jest as young az a girl.
When I think o' Zerubabel Lee, I declare
It sets me all into a whirl.
Last night he wus here, an' I told him to clear,
An' my! how surprised he did look!
Perhaps I wus rash, but he's after my cash;
I see through his plans like a book.

Some offers I've had that I cannot call bad.
There wus Deacon Philander Breeze—
I'd a sartin' said yes, when he wanted a kiss,
Ef he hadn't so flustrated me.
It took me so quick, that it felt like a kick.
Wy! I flew all to pieces at once.
Sez I, "You kin go; I'm not needin' a beau."
I acted I know like a dunce.

Sez he, ez he rose, "I hev come to propose"—
I stopped him afore he began—
"Wy, you better hed go an' see Hepsibah Stow;
I won't be tied down to a man."
"Mariar," sez he, "Widder Tompkins an' me
Can strike up a bargain, I know,
An' seein' ez we can't decide to agree,
Wy! I guess that I better hed go."

He picked up his hat from the chair where he sat,
An' he solemnly started away.
Sez I, with a look that I'm sure he mistook,
"You're perfectly welcome to stay—"
My face it wuz red ez our old wagon shed;
I thought fur the land I should melt.
Sez he, "I am done, good-night, leetle one."
I wish he'd a known how I felt.

To-day Isaac Beers, with his snickers an' sneers,
Whose face is ez ugly ez sin,
Dropped in, jest to see about buyin' my steers,
An' tickled the mole on my chin.
Sez I, "You jest quit, I don't like you a bit,
Your manners is rather too free;
You'd better behave till Jane's cold in her grave,
You can't come your sawder on me."

When dear David died, ez I sot by his side,
He ketched up my hand in his own,
He squeezed it awhile, an' he sez, with a smile,
"You'll soon be a widder alone,
An' when I am gone, don't you fuss or take on Like old widder Dorothy Day;
Look out for your tin ef you marry agin,
Nor throw your affections away."

My children are grown and got houses o' their own,
They're doin' ez well ez they can,
An' I'm gettin' sick o' this livin' alone,
I wouldn't mind havin' a man,
For David is gone to the mansions above,
His body is cold in the ground.
If you know o' a man who would marry fur love,
Jest find him an' send him around.

A SWIM FOR LIFE.

A Western Episode.

"Say, stranger, there's something wrong yonder, ain't there?"

Thus spoke a rough-looking miner on the outskirts of the camp to a Mexican who was walking hastily past. The stranger understood but imperfectly the remark addressed to him, but he replied, "Horses stole," and proceeded on his way, his long spurs jingling at every [illegible] anxiously, and, when he had disappeared down the hill, turned toward the saloon, muttering something about horse-thieves and hanging, and strolled, or, as he would have himself said, "loafed" into the bar, where an excited assembly was gathered.

"We'll, they've gone clean away;" cried the owner of the missing animals; "and my horses nor donkeys don't stray by nature. There's been some thieves around, you bet!"

"Like enough; but who's the man? However, if we ketch him, gentlemen, we'll shoot him fair."

"Give him a trial and rope him—that's the cure," said the owner. "And now tew business. My treat, gentlemen. Drinks 'round, and then I'll follow the tracks a bit, and let you know."

Such an offer was not to be slighted. The "drinks" having been fully appreciated by all present, at the expense of their health and brains, the owner of the missing beasts departed to follow the trail, which led toward the canon up the river.

Ogden Smith, or "Soft" Smith, as he was not unusually called, had that very morning taken his horses to water down-stream, and left them in a safe place pending their disposal. Ogden had been unfortunate in his prospecting. He was neither quick-witted nor quick-tempered, though ready enough with his six-shooter when circumstances seemed to warrant its use. But for this trait, "Soft" Smith would have been stamped with a strong variation of the term "idiot."

He followed the tracks mechanically, and after about half a mile, finding they still led up toward the hills, he returned, and as he strode back, breathing vengeance against his spoilers, he noticed human footprints on the further side of the trail—heavy boot and spur-marks.

He felt inclined to track these again, but, knowing the trail would lead to the river, then flooded with melting snows, he decided to return to the camp and enlist the vigilants in his cause.

It has never been correctly ascertained why horse-stealing was then, and is still, regarded as a worse crime than the taking of human life; but that this is the case in the West is undoubted. Many a rough digger was permitted to add to the notches already cut in the pistol-butt, but a horse-thief was hunted down and executed summarily.

Notwithstanding a gathering storm the men in the saloon, as soon as they had heard Ogden Smith's report, determined to do vengeance on the criminal. The sufferer, meantime, met with much sympathy, and "dust"—gold dust, that passed for currency—was freely shaken into Ogden's hat in the bar-room. The discussion as to whom the thief might be was waxing warm, when a voice cried:

"Reckon some Mexican's had a hand in this game."

This suggestion was at once adopted, and Bill, the miner, said:

"Aye, then I can show him. I saw him on the hill above this morning. Did you notice any tracks?"

"I did," replied Smith, eagerly. "Large boots and spur marks, too. That's the man!"

"We'll go for him. Who knows his place?"

Several present did, and one man added:

"He's a mighty quick shot, you may depend."

"We're more of us than him," was the answer of the leader. "He can't fix us all. Now, gentlemen, we must proceed reg'lar. 'Panel a jury, if you please; but there is no use in wasting time."

The jury was quickly chosen, and, in order to avoid unnecessary delay, horses were brought out, and the whole party rode through the driving rain and tempest to the Mexican's hut.

The door was burst open, and, before the surprised occupant could use his weapon, he was seized and bound and thrown helpless on the floor. Before he was disabled, however, he managed to seize and retain a small knife, which he thrust into his sleeve.

To his questions he got but scant replies. The jury were ushered into a small shed, and told to deliberate upon their verdict, after a few questions had been put to the criminal, who protested his innocence.

One bystander, more humane than the rest, volunteered to act as prisoner's advocate, and addressed the jury as a matter of form, for he knew the stranger's doom was sealed.

After a pause the jury again retired, and in a few minutes the self-appointed Judge, knocking at the door, asked for the verdict. To the astonishment of the bystanders, the answer was, "Not guilty!"

A cry of joy escaped the Mexican; an exclamation of disappointment was vented by Ogden Smith. But the Judge drew his revolver, and, beckoning to the committee, replied calmly:

"Gentlemen, you'll have to do better than that. Try again, and this time attend to the evidence."

He handled his pistol menacingly as he spoke, and the jury retired again.

They were not long left undisturbed, for time was passing, the tempest was increasing in severity, and the committee had some distance to ride that night. In five minutes the Judge again called them, and this time the obedient twelve gave the verdict "Guilty!"

"Quite correct," said the Judge. "I approve. It's a verdict. Carry out the sentence, yew," he added, to two of his associates. "And now, gentlemen, I think we've done our duty. The hosses wait. Hev ye anything to say?" he inquired of the criminal.

The poor man pleaded earnestly for wildly, but it was useless. The majority of the party then left the hut, and the two men, placing their unhappy prisoner astride a mule, unbound him, except for a turn of the rope on his left wrist, and walked beside him to the place of execution. There his outer clothing was taken from him, and his boots—those fatal witnesses—laid aside. He was then fastened to a tree. The place of execution had been well chosen. It was a low point jutting out into the river just below the rapids. The current was running swiftly, swollen by the melting snows and the tremendous rain, which was still descending in torrents. From this point the river descended rapidly. Higher up, but then obscured by the thickly falling rain and mist, was a high ridge, which projected across the river, and formed a sort of bow-like inclosure, in the center of which was (and is) a small wooded island.

Below this eyot the river divides. It becomes narrower, and passing on the right side over a small, rocky breakwater, or natural barrier, it takes a tremendous leap sheer 100 feet over the rock, spreading out from the base many feet in its descent. On the left side of the island the stream has worn away the rock to a great extent, and on that side the water hurries down a rapid at a steep angle, and at the bottom meets deep water, which drives in a swift current over the right shore, to a strip of beach or low ground—a watering station for animals.

The men charged with the execution had well chosen the place. The prisoner stood with hands clasped as one of his guardians was making preparations, and the other stood ready to fire should the prisoner attempt to escape. One was adjusting the cord upon a neighboring tree, underneath which the mule had been already led, when an exclamation from him made the other guardian turn his head. The quick-eyed Mexican seized his opportunity. With a swift sweep of his right hand he severed with the concealed knife the rope at his wrist, and with a desperate backward spring he threw himself into the eddying, boiling river.

The heavy splash was the first intimation that the other men had of the Mexican's escape; and, with revolver ready, one waited till the swimmer should reappear. He rose, and struck out boldly for the opposite shore. The man raised the pistol, when his companion stayed his arm.

"Give him a chance, Bob," he said. "You or me may want a good turn some day; and beside, I don't b'lieve he lifted them animals. Soft Smith's an idjit."

"Well, mebbe yer right," replied the other, as he returned his pistol. "Poor chap!" he added, with a touch of feeling to which he had long been a stranger. "Poor chap! the fall will save us the job, anyhow."

"He's gone!" replied the other. "He can't git over, eh?"

"You bet!" exclaimed his companion. "He's right enough, I do declare; he'll git out now!"

Meantime the unfortunate fugitive was struggling vigorously to gain the center of the stream. He was swimming strongly, hand over hand, and every now and then he cast a glance at the ridge of rocks that fringed the rapid leading to the fall of a sheer hundred feet. Could he clear this he might be saved. He was making good way, but ever being drawn nearer and nearer by the resistless current to his destruction. The men on shore watched his progress with feverish anxiety. Another yard or two and he would gain the rocky ledge which ended the fall and where the less-dangerous rapids began. Would he last?

The men clasped hands in their strong excitement, and by a simultaneous impulse cheered the swimmer on. The poor wretch heard it. It gave him courage. One minute more and he would be clear; with renewed energy he strove, and with a despairing effort clutched the rock. His legs swung for a second into the milky mass of water above the cataract. Could he bear the strain? A cheer from the shore; a mighty effort—swung himself over, and with a long, sweeping stroke dashed down the rapids and disappeared.

* * * * * *

The men turned away, breathing more freely, and returned as hastily as possible to camp to report. The storm still continued; the river had run up the creek, and it was nightfall ere, wet to the skin and chilled to the bones, they gained the saloon. Here all was confusion; twenty tongues were speaking at once, and all condemning "Soft" Smith. The "Judge" was present, and as the two men entered he said, "I'm kinder sorry we hanged that Mexican. We've done him an injury, boys, I'm afeard."

"Save trouble in the end, mebbe," said another. But the Judge shook his head.

"What's the matter?" inquired the late comers.

"Why, Soft Smith's a fool. He's found his beasts safe at home, where they went o' themselves, having broke halter. The tracks was the Mexican's tracks, but only to his own location. We've done that man a wrong, and I'm ready to apologize; I can't say fairer. Here's his health!"

A voice from the doorway replied: "I drink to that!" and as all eyes were turned in the direction of the sound, a ragged, half-naked form, the limbs bruised and bleeding from deep scratches, walked up to the bar. Terror sat upon every countenance. The visitor was the Mexican.

"Didn't ye—didn't ye hang him?" gasped the sturdy but superstitious Judge to his deputies.

"Guess not," replied one of the pair addressed. "He slipped into the river [illegible] across the Cataract Rapid."

"Thunder! But I'm glad. Here's my hat, boys; fill in your dust now, and let him have it."

No second bidding was needed. Very soon the heap of gold-dust had reached a goodly pile, to which Soft Smith was a most liberal contributor.

Ogden Smith was considerably laughed at, but the Mexican was regarded as a hero and prospered. The camp in time was broken up, but there are many still alive who remember that swim for life across the Small Snake river.

A Troublesome Elephant.

Secretary Kalb, of the Fair Association, was found in his Chestnut street office yesterday afternoon, looking very thoughtfully at a patent padlock lying before him on his desk. "I don't know," said he to a Globe-Democrat reporter who entered, "I don't know as that will answer, but I think it will." Then he fell into a brown study for a few minutes, that was ended by silently passing the lock over for examination. The reporter had no idea what it all meant, but expressed the opinion that the padlock was apparently a good one, and asked the secretary what he had bought it for.

"Well, you know the elephant at the Zoological Garden?" was the answer. I've got this for her, to make sure that she don't get into mischief. We have always kept her chained up by a shackle round one leg, but of late she has been freeing herself every night, and we have got to try a new scheme. For a long time the shackle was kept clasped by an ordinary thumbscrew, but she got an insight to the way it worked, and would unscrew it as fast as put on. Then we tried a small square nut, the same that you see on carriage bolts. This bothered her for several weeks, when she finally managed to get some sort of a catch on it, and every morning she would be loose. Then she got in the way of throwing the nut away and we could not find it at all. Now, I have got this padlock, that works with a small spring on one side, and I am inclined to think it will puzzle her to get the best of it."

"She's not ugly?" "Not a bit; but we don't like to go out in the morning and find her wandering around apparently laughing at you. She is as gentle as a lamb, and it would do you good to see her take her bath every evening, when he takes her from her quarters to the house for the night. She goes into the pond all over, diving and swimming as if it was the best of fun.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

—In a new decision by the Missouri Court of Appeals, in the matter of a property owner's petition for injunction against a telegraph company, which had put up a pole opposite his premises under a permit from the Board of Public Improvements, it was stated that the power of the Board to give such permits might be so limited as to exclude the erection of anything unsightly.

—The Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat says that Captain Paul Boyton sounded the water below the upper Genesee Falls recently, and found it over seventy feet in depth. He made a search under the falls for Sam Patch's bones, but failed to find even a vestige.

Egypt's Army.

The Egyptian army was organized by American officers, and as far as it has any efficiency it is their creation. These officers—some twenty-five in number—went to Egypt in 1867, nearly all broken in fortune and filled with high hopes in their new employment. It was through Gen. Thaddeus P. Mott, and son of Dr. Valentine Mott, who had made his way to Constantinople and there married a Greek lady, that these gentlemen were induced to enter the service of the Khedive. Gen. Mott served in Italy, and afterward rose to the rank of brigadier-general in the federal army during the late civil war. The best known of these Americans was Gen. Charles P. Stone, who almost immediately became chief of staff, and soon after firmly established himself in a post similar in power and authority to that of Gen. Von Moltke toward the German armies. It was not long before the American officers began to feel hostile pressure from two quarters—one from the American consul general, Col. George H. Butler, and from the English influences prevailing in Cairo and Alexandria. Then followed some personal encounters and general bickering disgraceful to all concerned, and as a body among the Christian colonies of those two cities these gentlemen soon lost any collective standing. Individually, however, they were soldiers of established reputation, the larger proportion being from the Confederate army, and they have nearly all led very adventurous careers, both before and after leaving the Egyptian service. The most prominent Confederate was Col. Charles Rhett, Chief of Staff to Gen. Joseph E. Johnston during the civil war. When Col. Rhett went to Egypt he was very much disinclined to adopt the habits of the military in matters of costume, and, in fact, had no sympathy with the country at all, and was quite outspoken in his views. From this circumstance he was never given an important command, but like many others, was given his pay, according to contract, which was an inflexible instrument. He was siezed with paralysis while on a visit to Europe, dying suddenly. He was the most popular of all the American officers in [illegible]

An officer of no less note was Loring Pasha, who, in 1849, performed the most difficult and painstaking march known in American military annals. He [illegible] supplied with artillery across the Rocky Mountains to Oregon—a five months' tramp. He subsequently engaged in the Mexican war, leaving an arm on the field, but when the civil war came he cast his fortunes with the South. When he left Egypt, where he was commandant of Alexandria, the Khedive gave him $50,000, which it is understood has almost melted away in disastrous speculation. It was Gen. Loring who constructed almost all of the important defenses of Alexandria, commanded the disastrous expedition against Abyssinia, and whose hand is visible in the military organization as it exists to-day. He is living in New York, engaged upon a book recounting the experiences of his life.

The career of Gen. Charles P. Stone is well known to all army officers, and had he remained in his original position on the army list there is scarcely an officer in the active service that would now rank him. He was, however, at the instance of the late Senator Sumner, sent to Fort Lafayette on charges of treasonable conduct at the battle of Ball's Bluff, and was subsequently dismissed. This event nearly upset his reason; but he rallied, became a mining engineer, and finally accepted the position at the head of the Egyptian staff which he still holds. His conduct in Egypt has been both highly praised and severely criticised. One thing is certain. He was about the only American officer who was able to hold his place against all intrigue, first with Ishmail Pasha, the deposed Khedive, and then with his son, Tewfik, his successor. Gen. Stone not only undertook to organize the present army, to revolutionize the rotten methods he found in vogue, but he set on foot a comprehensive system of central African exploration, under Col. C. C. Long, Sparrow Purdy and Majors Mason, Prout and Dye. The officers now remaining at the scene of conflict are Gen. Stone, Col. C. C. Long (not in the army) and Maj. Mason. Sparrow Purdy is dead. Among those no longer living, too, are Col. Jenifer, the inventor of the Jenifer saddle; Gen. Sibley, the inventor of the Sibley tent; Gen. Reynolds, Col. Frank Reynolds, Maj. Hunt and Col. Campbell, all ex-Confederate officers. Gen. R. E. Colston, who made a journey of 1,700 miles on a litter from equatorial Africa to the Nile, is now engaged as a military instructor at an academy on Washington Heights. Col. Wood is living quietly at Norfolk.

It is hardly probable that any of the American officers will participate in the struggle, with the exception of Gen. Stone, and it is extremely doubtful if he will be permitted to retain any important command if a religious war grows out of the present situation.

Few of the officers now live to see the fruit of their labors. There is a very large number of Americans and officers everywhere who will watch the result of the fighting as an evidence of what our military task-masters can do with African material. The army numbers 50,000 men, and the troops carry Remington rifles. In all of the local events of the Soudan the negro troops have proved themselves better soldiers than the Egyptians. As to the Bedouins, there is the same romance about their fighting qualities as there is about the North American Indian in the open field. Like other nomads they are valiant in ambush and can produce havoc, but they do not love modern artillery.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

Will We Import Meat?

The amount of fresh beef and mutton now brought from Australia and New Zealand to Great Britain is very large and is constantly increasing. The best scientific skill and inventive talent are employed in devising means to produce low temperatures and to perfect other means to insure preservation. Large capital and excellent business ability are now employed in various enterprises for supplying Great Britain with meat produced on the islands that lie in the South Pacific. The recent experiments of bringing fresh meat from Sydney to Glasgow in sailing vessels have been entirely successful. Now the question is presented to the business men of this country, why not bring fresh meat from South America to supply the cities on the Atlantic coast? The distance from South American ports to New York is less than half that from Australian ports to Glasgow. The great plains of several South American countries are covered with cattle that are now slaughtered for the hides and tallow they afford. It is true that meat is cheaper in New York than in London, but it is very dear in the former city. It is also true that the cattle in Australia are superior to those in South America, but a few years' time will be sufficient to grade them up to the proper standard. It costs much more to raise cattle and sheep in Australia than in South America, as most of the grazing land belongs to individuals or is leased from the Government. The margin of profit is much larger for South American meat, as the cattle can be obtained cheaper, the voyage is shorter and the temperature of the ocean over which vessels sail is more favorable for preservation.—Chicago Times.

An Intelligent Pug.

In affectionate loyalty to a four-footed friend, a correspondent in Tarrytown, who has been annoyed by the charge of stupidity preferred against the entire race of pug dogs in an article copied by the Sunday Tribune, very handsomely vindicates the intelligence of at least one pug. He writes: "He acknowledged but one master, that being his mistress, and seems to be unhappy away from her. He is delighted to go with her to walk, as he often does, but never thinks of asking to go if she takes a bag with her to go to the city. On occasions, he seems to know about the time she returns in the afternoon, and has been known to sit on a chair for two hours, looking from a window, where he could see a carriage turn toward the house, when he would manifest his joy by barks and yelps and rush to the door to receive her. When she leaves with a trunk for a longer time, he shows his grief, not only by his countenance, but by shedding tears, which I have seen roll down his face. He has been taught many tricks. When living in town, he would always run to the basement window, when the postman whistled, to receive the letters, and would give them only to his mistress. Once an advertisement was thrown in, and the cook tossed it in the coal-scuttle, but he insisted on having it, and went with it up-stairs. He will walk on his hind legs, or bark for his dinner; will sneeze when he wants to take a walk; will eat nothing that you tell him has 'cost money' until you say it is 'paid for;' will sit on his hind legs, with a piece of cake or cracker on his nose until five is counted, when he will eat it; and although he is very fond of going to walk, he will not go with the children until he first goes to his mistress and asks permission."

A Beautiful Voice.

Madam de Stael would have gladly parted with some of her wit if she could only have been beautiful. It would not be strange if the equally famous "George Eliot" felt the same hopeless hunger for beauty (for she was a remarkably homely woman). We see how sweet it was to her to be praised for a grace that is akin to beauty.

This little story about George Eliot is told by a Maine lady, who met the novelist at a hotel in Switzerland, just after "Romola" appeared. One day Mrs. Lewes was reading aloud in French to a little girl in the garden, and the American drew near to listen to the musical tones. Presently Mrs. Lewes glanced at the intruder and said:

"Do you understand?"

"I do not care for the matter," answered the American; "I only came to listen to your sweet voice."

"Do you like it?" said Mrs. Lewes, with some surprise.

The American warmly expressed her admiration, and George Eliot's face lighted with pleasure as she took her hand, saying:

"I thank you. I would rather you would compliment my voice than my 'Romola.'"—Youth's Companion.

His habits were Hibernian to the core, and 'racy of the soil.' Dining out one day in Dublin, a lady, an intimate acquaintance, whom he took down to dinner, said: 'Now, really, Sir William, this is outrageous; you haven't washed your hands.' With great good humor the eminent oculist replied: 'I will bet you that there's a dirtier hand than that here.' 'I don't believe it,' rejoined his fair companion. 'Well then, there,' said the knight, and he held up his other hand. He spoke truth."—Chicago Herald.

—"Vy, Adolph," said Mrs. Felderstelderberger, at Long Branch, "you hef been helped tree dimes to dat sherry pies, und you vill be sicks!" "Neffer mind," says Mr. Felderstelderberger, "I bay four tollar mit a tay and Adolph is entitled to a whole pie, anyhow."

—"We have plenty of fresh salt air here; even our lady boarders wear solitaires in their ears," said an enthusiastic seaside landlord. "Don't say so," said the press guest. "Have you a salt rheum in the house?" "Yes, sir," said the landlord quickly; "a humorous correspondent has it just now."—Chicago Tribune.

—Teacher—"What is a score?" Pupil—"The number of runs made at a cricket-match." Teacher—"No, no; what I mean is, how much does a score signify numerically. What idea does it give you? That is to say, if I were to tell you that I had a score of horses, what would you think?" Pupil—"Please, marm, I should think you was stuffin' me."

The Library at Abbotsford.

The library is the handsomest apartment at Abbotsford. It is fifty feet in length by thirty in breadth, and has an immense bay-window that affords a charming glimpse of the Tweed. The ceiling is carved after designs from Melrose Abbey. There are twenty thousand volumes here and in the study. The book-cases were made under Sir Walter's direction, by his own workmen. Some of them contain rare and curious old books and MSS. that are carefully guarded under lock and key. Here, on the wall, is the portrait of Sir Walter's eldest son, who was Colonel of the Fifteenth Hussars. He went out to Madras in 1839, and was a very popular and efficient officer; but he soon fell a victim to the fatal climate of India and died on the return voyage to England, whither he had been ordered on account of his health. Here, too, is the bust of Sir Walter at the age of forty-nine, by Chantrey. There are chairs exquisitely wrought, from the Borghese Palace at Rome, the gift of the Pope; a silver urn upon a stand of porphyry, from Lord Byron; and an ebony cabinet and set of chairs presented by King George IV. In a glass case, shielded from the touch of profane fingers, are the purse of Rob Roy; the brouch of his wife; a note-book in green and gold, once the property of Napoleon I.; and a gold snuff-box, also given by King George IV. When this royal friend was Regent, he invited Scott to dine with him in London, addressing him familiarly as "Walter," and showering upon him evidences of his esteem; when he succeeded to the throne, one of the first acts of the kingly prerogative was to create him a Baronet.—St. Nicholas.

The Center of Population.

In the several States efforts are always made to establish a capital very near the center, but this is often impracticable. The Massachusetts Legislature meets at Boston at the east end of the State, and our National Capital is also far to the east and out of the geographical line of the center of population. The great emigration and the growth of population West was constantly changing the imaginary point on the map which indicates that there are equal numbers North, South, East and West. According to the census returns in 1870 the center of population was 48 miles east by north of Cincinnati. In 1880 the center was near the village of Taylorsville, in Kentucky, and eight miles west by south of Cincinnati. It is predicted that in 1890 the center of population will be in Jennings County, in Southeastern Indiana. In these days of telegraph and fast steam travel it does not much matter where our capitals are located. The real center of a community is now where its business is transacted. There is no danger of Washington being removed to the West of the Mississippi in this century at least.—Demorest's Monthly.

THE CHOCTAW CONSPIRACY.

Exact Copies of the Papers Found.

The Choctaw Courier.

We give below the papers showing the consiracy headed by the notorious disturber of the public peace of this county, Gen. Jack Turner, to exterminate the whites. They speak for themselves in showing the intended accomplishment of a most hellish crime against humanity and civilization.

The papers are an exact copy found except as to the omission of names for the purpose of privacy. No names are inserted except those for whom writs were sworn out. With this explanation the papers explain themselves.

F D BARNEY Clerk.

this our last meeting this sid of our time and we only have 22 members in desotoville Precinct and we are going take this County by sheding Blood and we are going to slay from the young up to the oldes and Capt Jack turner is going with his mens that night to Butler and Capt Moses turner will go up to the Camp Groun and Capt Peter Hill will take his mens to Desotoville and Capt Jesse Wil take his mens to the Mt Sterling and you must all Look out and be taking and we will meet on the 17 nignt Sept For this will be our time when every Body will have Preaching in minds Mr Turner is our Gen and when we take this County we will pay him Mr. F D Barney is our Book Keeper and we will pay him too."

On Tuesday morning, the 15th inst., the foregoing papers were found by three white men and and placed by one of them in the hands of Mr. Ed. McCall. who delivered them to the Solicitor for action. On Wednesday morning a meeting of citizens of Butler was called and it was decided that warrants for a few of the leaders should be issued and the parties arrested and lodged in jail, which was promptly done, and the following negroes were arrested: Jack Turner, Jesse Wilson, F. D. Barney, Peter Hill, Range West, Willis Lyman, and Aron Scott.

On Thursday evening a mass meeting of between two and three hundred people, after mature deliberation, agreed to postpone action until Saturday, at which all the citizens of the county, black and white, were requested to meet and determine what should be done with the malefactors.

About one thousand people of all clases accordingly assembled at Butler on Saturday, and the evidence against the parties charged was submitted, and by almost an unanimous vote it was decided that Jack Turner should be taken out of the jail and "hanged by the neck till dead."

At about fifteen minutes after one P. M. the ceremony was performed, and Jack Turner, who for eight years past has been the bete noir of the citizens of the county, breathed his last. He met his death coolly and made a deliberate and steady speech just before the block was knocked from under him. He died persisting in a stubborn denial of the charges contained in the papers.

The Bullock county Treasurer's report takes up six and a half columns in the Union Springs Herald.

A negro by the name of Coker, was hung by a body of citizens at Cowles station, Macon county, last week, to pay the penalty of the double crime of outrage and murder of a white woman.

Judge George H. Craig, of Dallas, has been nominated by the Republicans of the fourth district, as their candidate for Congress in that district against Gen. Shelley. A negro by the name of Jones, was nominated for the unexpired term.

"Two protectionists, one out-and-out the other incidental have been nominated for Congress in Alabama, which shows the people of two districts count an honest Democrat above the tariff question," observes the Montgomery Advertiser.

Verbena Views.

Our growing town must be increasing in its attractiveness, if one might judge by the number of visitors it is having. Messrs. Lynch and Smith, and the two Mrs. Edwards, have been visiting friends here. Mrs. McCay and her sister, Miss Davis, are now guests of Mrs. Haynie. Miss Alma Baldwin, of Montgomery, left yesterday, after a short stay with relatives, and Misses Callie and Minnie McKenzie, afforded their many friends and admirers much pleasure by spending several days among us.

We hear many regrets expressed at the removal from our midst of Miss Watson. She is a lady of superior culture, and possesses other fine qualifications as a teacher.

Your correspondent, "Occasional," will keep you posted in reference to the Academy building and the hotel. Perhaps the critics did not know that the object of having the "holes" so large in the balustering was not that "the children might creep through," but that the members of "the stock company" when they wished to hide, might crawl through these "holes" and then draw them in after them. Should they get much bluer about the huge thing, we may look out for this wonderful feat.

The Methodists are just now in high spirits over the very near completion of their house of worship. The improvements being added will make this church "a thing of beauty" and a joy to the pastor and his congregation.

OBSERVER.

Dots From Mahon's Creek.

We are having too much rain at present. Cotton is much injured. Will not make an average crop. But the present outlook is encouraging. So let the people begin in time to save all they have made, live close for another year, as they have been accustomed to doing in the past, sell all they can spare, pay off old debts, and then keep out of debt, if they would be happy and prosperous.

Rev. Mr. Miars has become so much prostrated that a change is necessary, and he will go to Blount Springs.

We read the VIEW, and would like to see more of the neighborhood dots from different portions of the county. M. R. A.

The Chancery Court for Chilton county, Chancellor N. S. Graham presiding, was in session last week. This will probably be the last term at which the Chancellor will preside in our county, as there is strong reason to believe that the Congressional Convention which met at Dadeville yesterday has made him its standard bearer. The Chancellor has been for years one of our principal legal luminaries, and has discharged the arduous duties of his office with a zeal and earnestness which give a guarantion, that in this new field of usefulness, the interest of the people of Alabama, will be in the hands of one worthy and able to bear the trust.

Our Maplesville correspondent writes: A worm believed to be the army worm is eating the grass and potato leaves. No serious damage reported yet.

Mr. N. W. Foshee offers 15 cts for the first bale of new cotton. The crop is considerably behind last year in maturing, none received here yet.

The church building has been greatly improved the past week and a new organ purchased.

The Selma road south of here is in a miserable condition. Who's fault?

Mr. R. M. Goodgame charged with the killing of Mr. Robert Mullins, was tried before Judge Arrington last Wednesday, in Montgomery. The defendant was granted bail and the amount of his bond was fixed at $3,000, which up to present writing had not been made.

If Clanton had a first-class (?) hotel, a second-class grog shop, an occasional lightning-rod peddler or book agent, an organ grinder, a blind beggar, a peanut vender, et caetera, she would be a paradise for some; but the majority of us would be inclined to vacate at once.

The negro Tholy Love, charged with the killing of Greene Oden three years ago, had a preliminary examination before Judge Callen, on Monday, and was bound over to the circuit court in the sum of $400.

Young Garland, who was indicted for murder in the first degree for killing young Addison in a duel, near Lunenburg, Va., has been acquited. The jury were out only 15 miuutes.

Dr. Robinson writes us that he regrets that we mentioned his name in a petition to a body from which he did not expect reimbursment, and had no thought of remuneration.

Jemison locals received too late for this issue. Jemison is jubilant over the fact that its base ballers have defeated the Scotland club of Bugsnorten by a score of 17 to 5.

A FLORIDA MADRIGAL.

'Tis the song of a Seminole maiden,
  On the banks of the Hatchenaha,
Awaiting her lover, game laden,
  Who has gone to the Istokpoga.

"Oh, why dost thou stay, Tustenugge,
  My lover from far Hickpochee?
And hast thou no fear of Micco lugge,
  Thy rival from Withlacoochee?

'Or others who gather around me,
  Dusky heroes of chase and of war?
Oh, my love, hasten up the Kissimmee,
  And together we'll wander afar.

"We'll go to the Pithlachestcoatee,
  Seek hammocks on fair Waccasassa,
Ascend to its head Chattahoochee,
  Land on Sanibel, off Punta Rassa;

"Float swiftly down Caloosahatchie,
  Escaping from Okeechobee,
To the land of Halpatahtchie,
  And praries of salt Manatee;

"Dream dreams on Tahopekaliga,
  Sing songs upon old Suwannee,
Skim the surface of Woyohokalpa,
  Tuskawilla, and Okeehumkee,

"Wakulla, Wekiva, Homosassa,
  Cheshowiska, and Ocklawaha,
The famous Lake Ichebucksassa,
  And yellow Apalachicola;

"From Okeefinoke to Ocklocknee,
  From Tallahassee down to the sea,
Away from all scenes that might shock thee,
  We'll float o'er smooth Apalachee;

"By the Tsala Apopka we'll roam,
  Hie to haunts of the sweet alligator;
In the Southland we'll find us a home,
  Breathe the breath of the torrid equator."

But, absorbed by the love of Wyond,
  Sleek Iche, and fat Pemmiwa,
He heeded not fair Miccosouki,
  Nor again came to Hatchenaha.

Stock in Montana.

A representative of the Pioneer-Press was yesterday introduced to a couple of gentlemen at the Merchants' Hotel, both of whom were interested in stock-raising, the one in Montana, the other in Texas. The Texan was on his way to Montana with a view to decide for himself the advantages that the latter offered over Texas for stock-raising. The Montana man is the junior member of a firm, which consists of himself and brother, that are considered as among the heaviest stock men in the Territory. They were almost the pioneers in stock-raising in the Territory of Montana, having commenced about sixteen years ago. Previous to this they were engaged in freighting from St. Joseph, Mo., to Denver, Colo., and afterward, when the railroad was completed to that point, from Denver and Salt Lake to Helena, Montana Territory, which was then coming into prominence as a mining camp. These long trips were made with mules and cattle. Sixteen years ago the last trip of the season was made rather later than usual, and, owing to delays on the road, it became necessary to winter in Montana. With great misgivings as to the result, the mules and cattle were turned loose to find what substance they could for themselves through the winter months. Spring arrived, when what was their surprise to find that the cattle turned up in magnificent condition, with a sleek, well-fed look that showed they had had no trouble in providing for themselves. It should be noticed, also, that the snows than usual. This, in conjunction with the fact that all the deer and elk they killed were found in remarkably good condition, led the brothers to the conclusion that there was hardly a country in the world so well adapted to purposes of stock-raising.

Returning to Denver, therefore, they sold their steers and mules and bought stock cattle, which they drove into Montana, and from that date until now they have been among the largest stock men in the Territory. From cattle they went into the raising of sheep and horses, both of which latter are more profitable than cattle. It was stated that sheep were every year becoming more numerous in the Territory. Sheep require more care and attention than cattle and give correspondingly large results. It is also a business that requires less capital than it does to engage in the raising of cattle. The expenses of herding and shearing, including herder's pay and board for one year, for a herd of 2,000 is about $2,000. The yield of wool will average $1.50 per head, or a total of $3,000. The increase of lambs can be calculated at 25 per cent. of the original number of the herd, and, as at the end of the year they are of equal value to a full-grown sheep, their value would be $1,000. The gain, therefore, is almost 100 per cent. with ordinary attention. It is estimated that there are now about 200,000 sheep in the eastern part of Montana, and the number will increase rapidly, as new people are constantly going into the business. In response to an inquiry as to the sheep freezing, it was stated that such a thing was unknown. It is true there have been losses, but in all cases death has been caused by suffocation, on account of the pens having been too small, so that the sheep have crowded together, one on top of the other; this causes them to sweat, and then when they are turned out in the cold air in the morning they take cold and die. The best cattle and sheep region was stated to be between the Clark Fork Bottom and the Musselshell River. The exceptionally fertile and temperate region is, however, practically unoccupied as yet, and the stock interest of Montana is at present but in its infancy.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

The Newer Arithmetic.

A member of the Common Council promises the appointment of [illegible] weigher to seven men; that of City Hall janitor to eight others; that of wood inspector to six more. How many promises did he make in all, and how many men thirst for his blood?

A tramp hires out to a farmer for fourteen dollars per month. He gets a boss dinner, works an hour and skips. Counting the dinner worth thirty cents how much did he make? Counting the three bites he got from the farmer's dog at twenty-five cents each how much did he lose?

Two men who regard their sacred honor as at stake go out to fight a duel. One shoots a calf in a field and the other pops a farmer sitting on a fence, and they shake hands and declare their sacred honors freed from all stains. How much sacred honor does it take to fill a flour-sack, and how long would it take one grasshopper to eat the whole business up?

A Brooklyn Heroine.

Miss Tillie Trimble, who lives with her parents at No. 92 Fourth Place, became know as a heroine in that part of Brooklyn yesterday. On Monday afternoon she caught a burglar in the house. After giving an alarm she grabbed him around the neck and held him, with the assistance of her mother, till a policeman arrived. Miss Trimble is a very prepossessing young lady, nineteen years old. She has regular features, fine complexion and teeth, dark eyes and trim figure, but not a girl whom an acquaintance would think could be depended on to capture the burglar. "Now, tell all about it, Tillie," remarked her mother when the World reporter called last evening. Her father puffed at a pipe, but all the time looking proudly upon his daughter. "It was about 1:30 in the afternoon," began Miss Tillie, "when mother and I heard a noise up stairs. It sounded like something dropping on the floor. I first thought that one of my brothers had come home. I went up to find out, and entered the bedroom back of the parlor. There is a hall room which is entered from the bedroom. The door to it was open, and as I peeped in I saw a man fumbling at the bureau drawers. He must have heard me, for he turned suddenly around and made a leap for me. I gave a jump toward the door and he ran after me. His big foot came down on my right foot and hurt it badly. He stumbled against the foot of the bed and I succeeded in reaching the hallway. I fell down the stairs and he rushed after me. I reached the street and yelled, 'thief, robber!' and ran back into the house. I met him coming out and I put my arms around his neck.

"Is that the first man you ever hugged?" asked the father. Her two big brothers giggled, but she paid no attention.

"In a moment," she continued, "mother had him by the collar, and he tried to break away, but we held on, and he dragged us into the front court-yard. He asked me what I would take to settle it and let him go, and I said that nothing but a policeman would settle him with me. Several men came to our rescue, and finally Officer Cassidy arrived and took charge of him. There were sixty dollars in money and several gold watches in one of the bureau drawers that he had tried to rob."

The prisoner described himself as David Henry, and gave a fictitious address. Skeleton keys were found in his possession with which he entered the premises. He turned over a chair, the noise of which attracted the attention of Miss Trimble. It is believed that he is an old offender. Last night a number of friends of Miss Trimble called and complimented her on her exploit.—N. Y. World.

Kiss Me Good-Bye, Dear.

That is a phrase heard in the hallway of many a home as the man of the house is hurrying away to exchange daily labor for daily bread in the mart of commerce. Sometimes it is the wife who says it, sometimes infant lips prattle the caressing words, holding up a [illegible] and the strong man waits a moment to clasp his treasure and is gone; and all day he wonders at the peace in his heart; at the nerve with which he meets business losses or bears business crosses. The wife's kiss did it, the baby's kiss did it, and he realizes that it is not wealth or position or luck that makes our happiness, but the influence we bear within us from the presence of those we love!

Kiss me good-bye! Oh, lips that have said it for the last time, would you ever ask again in those pleading tones for the kiss so tardily given? Would we not remember that the relation the flower bears to the universe is as carefully provided for as that of the brightest star; that the little action of a loving heart goes side by side with the deed of heroic worth; that love is the dew of life; that the parting for a day may be the parting of a lifetime.

"How many go forth in the morning
That never come home at night!
And hearts have broken
For hard words spoken
That sorrow can ne'er set right."

Make the air vocal with kisses! Many tears have been shed over unkissed kisses—over those "dear as remembered kisses after death," but the time to kiss is the present. Kiss your children, man of business, before you leave home; kiss the mother of your children, and that dear old mother who sits in the chair by the window—no matter if her cheek is wrinkled, her heart is young—and then go about your day's work with a "thank God" in your soul that you have some one at home to kiss.

"For though in the quiet evening
You give us the kiss of peace,
Yet it might be
That never for thee
The pain of the heart should cease."

Change in Food Essential.

If one boy were to say to another that he could not eat one quail, or partridge, a day for thirty days in succession, very likely the challenged boy would reply that he could. At first glance such a thing would seem not only possible but a desirable task, for the quail is a very toothsome bird. Nevertheless, many have tried to do it, and there is only one instance on record wherein the eater succeeded. In February, 1870, two men, both of whom lived in Washington, made a wager in regard to the matter. The man who did the eating was a broad-shouldered, muscular person. He selected the hour between nine and ten in the morning, and ate a partridge, in the presence of many people, during that hour every day, for thirty days. On the last day he was so nervous as to be almost unable to write his name, and since then he has suffered a great deal. Of course, such wagers are foolish to a certain extent, but we learn from this experiment that change in our food is absolutely necessary.

—A Pittsburgh cliff-climbing goat had been reading lion stories, and so knew what to do when a bull-dog got after him. When near a declivity the dog was about to spring upon his prey. The goat dodged and the dog fell eighty feet upon the rocks below and was instantly killed.—Philadelphia Press.

FACTS AND FIGURES.

—For one mile of railroad it takes 352 rails, 30 feet long, 5,250 pounds of spikes, 5,650 pounds of fish plates and 1,750 of bolts.

—The total tonnage of vessels lost, under all flags, in 1881, was 1,250,000, or, according to the iron trade report, more than the whole steamship tonnage launched in 1878, 1879 and 1880. Of these vessels, 425 were steam vessels and 2,750 sailing vessels.—Chicago Journal.

—The plantation of F. A. Luling, about four miles below Hahnville, La., has been sold for $104,000. The purchaser is Mr. Viterbo, a learned chemist of Paris, who intends to make this a grand central place for the grinding of cane. The owner is said to be backed by large means.

—The shipment of strawberries from Long Island to Boston this season was light when compared with former years. The total shipments were 330,490 quarts, which sold for an average of ten cents per quart, or over $33,000. The crop was less profitable and the season shorter than usual.—N. Y. Times.

—The longest three-quarter inch rod ever made was rolled at the Albany (N. Y.) Iron-works a few days since. It is 263 feet long, free of flaw, and plump from end to end. It is forty feet longer than any rod ever before produced in this or any other country, the next largest having been made in Pennsylvania.

—The life of railroad plant is not great. New roads, with iron rails and wooden structures, will need renewals, for the most part, within ten years. Ties will rot out in from five to eight years. Rails endure according to traffic, and, for light work, will last ten years. Good wooden bridges, when new, will be dangerous in ten years, unless covered.

—Ex-Governor Stanford's breeding and training farm on the Southern Pacific Railroad, forty miles from San Francisco, comprises about two thousand acres, and is provided with everything which a horse could possibly desire. The stables proper cover an area of over 3,000 feet in length and 150 feet in breadth, and furnish accommodation for 550 horses, in whose care seventy-five men are employed.—Chicago Times.

—The total length of telegraph wires in the city of New York, including telephone and burglar alarm wires, is 10,100 miles. The Metropolitan Telephone Company leads with 3,500 miles, followed by the Western Union Telegraph Company with 2,300. The weight of this vast amount of iron is about 3,000,000 pounds. Of the number of poles it is hard to estimate. The Western Union uses over 5,000.—N. Y. Sun.

—The number of theaters in the United States is estimated to be 4,500. The average receipts of one night's performance is about $150, and the same statistical [illegible] who compiles these numbers further states that the public pay $675,000 every night for amusements, and that in a season of forty weeks the sum of $[illegible] is expended on theatrical performances.

From Macon Telegraph and Messenger: Dr. A. G. Hobbs, Professor of Eye, Ear and Throat Diseases, in the Southern Medical College, of Atlanta, has very recently and successfully performed the most difficult operation in opthalmic surgery in removing the left eye with a tumor of Judge Isaac S. Clements, editor of the Cumming Clarion. Dr. Hobbs' rapidly increasing practice from all portions of Georgia and adjoining States is the highest evidence of his skill in his profession.

Pleasant Remedy for Toothache.

Dr. T. C. Osborn, in the Medical Brief, states that his cook came to him with a swollen cheek, asking for something to relieve the toothache with which she had been suffering all night. He was on the point of sending her to a dentist when it occurred to him that there was in the house a vial of compound tincture of benzoin.

"After cleaning the decayed tooth," he says, "I saturated a pledget of cotton lint with the tincture, and packed it well into the cavity, hoping this would suffice for the time, and told her to come back in two or three hours if she was not relieved. I was turning away, when she said it might not be necessary, perhaps, as the pain was already gone. Supposing her faith had a large share in the relief, I would not allow myself to think that the medicine had anything to do with the cure any more than so much hot water would have had. But when I arrived at my office two other patients were awaiting me with the same affliction, and I determined, by way of experiment, to use the same remedy. To my agreeable surprise, both patients declared themselves immediately relieved, and begged a vial of the tincture for future use. During the winter a number of similar cases applied, and were instantly relieved with the same treatment, all expressing much satisfaction with the remedy. In December I told my druggist of the discovery, and recommended him to sell it to any person applying for 'toothache drops.' This, he reports, he has done, and that every one seems delighted with the medicine."

The reader should remember that benzoin is a resinous substance obtained from the Styrax benzoin, a tree of the East Indies, having a fragrant odor and an aromatic taste. It should not be confounded with benzole, benzine or any preparation from petroleum.—Prairie Farmer.

—Charles Langheimer, better known as "Dicken's Dutchman," who was recently arrested at Philadelphia for tapping a till of a feed store, entered a plea of guilty. Upon being interrogated by the court he said he was now seventy-nine years of age and had served forty-two years in prison. He wanted to be sent to the Eastern Penitentiary, as it felt more like home to him there. The defendant thought he would be able to reform after serving another term, and if his honor would give him but one year he would begin a new life at eighty. He was sent back to his old quarters in the Penitentiary, to remain there one year.

Of Interest to Railroad Eating-Houses.

There is to be a National Convention of railroad eating-house proprietors to adopt some new article of food in place of the sandwich; something that one can eat without blasting it off in sections. What the traveling public needs is something simple and appetizing, that is cheap and handy; which can be eaten without carrying a set of burglar's tools along. Of course, if a person understands the combination of a sandwich, he can get into it, but half the people might as well try to eat an express messenger's safe. At the proposed convention we understand a Chicago proprietor of an eating-house will exhibit a new article of food, composed of one part codfish ball, two parts liver, one part bologna sausage, one part cheese and two parts stale bread, the whole clap-boarded up with building paper or strawberry shortcake crust, and roofed with hard tack. The ground plan and front elevation of the new railroad food looked well, as we saw it on exhibition at the morgue in Chicago, and it seems as though it ought to take the place of the sandwich. The contents of the new fixed ammunition can be reached by a scuttle in the roof, or a door can be made in the side, and the stuff can be dug out with a corkscrew. A Cincinnati railroad restaurant keeper thinks he can improve on the new Chicago food by placing it in a percussion shell, about the size of a cocoanut, which could be exploded by pounding it on the arm of a car-seat, or hitting it against a boot-heel, though we think it would be difficult to regulate the charge to explode it, and there might be danger of blowing out the eye of an innocent passenger. Some people who travel are nervous, and they would crawl under the seats if an explosion of such a sandwich took place. Some of the old eating-house keepers are so wedded to the old sandwich that they do not want to give it up, hoping to compromise at the convention by having the sandwich put together with a hinge, and open by a time-lock. This, however, would be dangerous in the case of children, who would be continually getting their fingers caught in between the two shutters of the sandwich. Those who favor retaining the sandwich are no doubt men who have a stock on hand sufficient to last eight or ten years, all painted and grained and varnished, and they think it will be hard to get rid of them; but we understand the Government is ready to take the sandwiches off the hands of the restaurants, to be used by the Ordinance Department for exterminating the Indians. By firing the sandwiches at the Indians, the Government can prosecute the war and issue rations to feed the survivors at the same time. If a sandwich struck an Indian it would kill him, and the family could pick up the missile that had laid the father low and eat it. The sandwich would not be a total loss by any means, and we hope the convention will decide to replace it by the new central fire food.—Peck's Sun.

A CLEVER DOCTOR.

[illegible] the Hon. and [illegible] Lambert, a clergyman of [illegible] England, found that his [illegible] growing infirm, a mental and [illegible] to take posses[illegible] melancholy [illegible] knows why or [illegible] shake it off. [illegible] eloquent, sure [illegible] in the church—what was [illegible] the Hon. and Rev. Ed-[illegible]

[illegible] young clergy-[illegible] him of his own [illegible] asking the [illegible]

[illegible] extremely inter-[illegible] Mr. Lam-[illegible] pause, gave him a pre-[illegible]

[illegible] together to Rouen, and [illegible] then noticed that the doc-[illegible] beautiful white dog, a pointer, [illegible] around his master's [illegible]

[illegible] separated as they reached the [illegible] doctor to go and see his pa-[illegible] the clergyman to seek an apoth-[illegible] where he got his prescription pre-[illegible]

[illegible] morning the Honorable and [illegible] Mr. Lambert was better. The [illegible] prescription had made him [illegible] it had given him strength, he [illegible] appetite for breakfast. Months [illegible] treatment in London at the hands of [illegible] physicians had not done this [illegible]

[illegible] to thank and remunerate [illegible] when he remembered that he [illegible] know his name. Instinct told [illegible] however, that he might meet him [illegible] the Mont St. Catherine. So [illegible] renewed hope, health, energy he [illegible] to the top of the hill. In [illegible] he was joined by the French [illegible] and his dog, who came bound-[illegible] with his pointer nose in the [illegible]

[illegible] two men greeted each other with [illegible], and shook hands cordially.

"You have saved my life, doctor," [illegible] Mr. Lambert, with unusual enthu-[illegible]. "Not at all, my dear friend," [illegible] the doctor; "I only gave you a [illegible] tonic, which also made you sleep. [illegible] what none of my English [illegible] to have found [illegible] you have nothing the matter [illegible] you! Your system needs a little [illegible] that is all. Railroad travel, my [illegible] friend, will soon set you up. Now, [illegible] dare say, you have been leading a very [illegible] and sedentary life; now, haven't [illegible]?"

"It is true, I have."

"Take my advice, travel, ride day and [illegible]; take no medicine, excepting [illegible] syrups, which I will give you; [illegible] adventure, lead a more varied ex-[illegible], and, my friend—you are all [illegible]!"

Now came the delicate question of money, and the Englishman felt for the [illegible] guinea.

He tendered it to the French doctor, [illegible] laughingly pushed it away, with a [illegible] soft, well-formed, white hand.

"Never—never," said he; "for so light a service, permit me to make my [illegible] a return for 'a lesson in English conversation!'"

It was gracefully done, and the embarrassed Englishman put his gold back into his pocket.

"Doctor," said he, in a low voice, [illegible], "I am an Englishman, [illegible] I hate to be under an obligation; [illegible] have lifted a load off my heart which [illegible] hung there for six months; you [illegible] made a new man of me. Now allow me to be of some service to you. I [illegible] here by rail at 1 o'clock to-morrow [illegible] for Paris; until then I am at [illegible] service—and forever after. Can I [illegible] anything for you?"

The doctor reflected a moment, and [illegible] at his dog.

"I don't know, indeed; and yet I do happen to think of one thing. You might save me a journey to Paris, which, with my engagements, is just now inconvenient. But it is asking too much, perhaps."

"What—how—too much?" said the clergyman.

"Well, I have a number of sick people under my charge whom I treat for disease of the brain. One of these is a very rich woman who is slightly deranged. I hoped to have cured her. Unhappily she has determined to return to Paris, and I have no authority to detain her. I perceive that she will fret until this caprice is gratified. I must go with her to place her in charge of her friends, and I have been putting off from day to day, because I cannot leave my other patients, the duty of taking her home. Now, if you would escort her it would be a real service," said the doctor.

"My dear sir, a crazy young woman, at 1 o'clock at night, and I a clergyman of the Church of England," said Mr. Lambert, forgetting his late gratitude.

"Oh, she is 46, my dear sir, and her mania is a very quiet one. She looks and acts like a sheep, poor woman, and she will scarcely speak to a stranger. I do not know that she will go with you. The hour is rather early—1 in the morning—but still I might ask her, and it will be a real favor to me."

"Bring her along, doctor," said the clergyman, ashamed of his reluctance; "bring her along—a sheep and forty-six; I will take care of your patient to Paris!"

Talking in this way they reached the gates of the city. Before separating, the doctor gave his card to Mr. Lambert.

"Au revoir," said he, "and perhaps adieu, my dear sir. Let me hear from you from time to time; and I hope, if we never meet again, that you will retain, as I shall do, an agreeable recollection of our acquaintance. I may not see you again, as my friend may not be willing to go with you—adieu!"

Mr. Lambert glanced at the doctor's card, feeling anew the embarrassment of the possible night journey with an insane woman, and regretting his promise in spite of his gratitude.

He read on the card—

"Dr. de La Belle, Rue Antoine; No. 11."

Mr. Lambert walked through the Rue Antoine and stopped at No. 11. It was a large, handsome house, with the announcement in black letters on a brass plate, Docteur de La Belle.

On arriving at his hotel he asked the landlord if he knew of Dr. de La Belle.

"I believe, sir," said the man, civilly, "that he is the best physician in Rouen."

At 1 o'clock in the morning Mr. Lambert waited with some anxiety in the depot the arrival of the train. Dr. de La Belle had not arrived. The English clergyman rubbed his hands with great satisfaction—for he did not care for this particular responsibility—when some one touched him lightly on the shoulder.

It was the doctor!

Seated on a bench was a lady in black, with her veil tightly drawn over her face.

"I have taken a coupe," said the doctor, "so you will not be incommoded by other travelers. Here is mademoiselle's purse, ticket and little traveling sachel; perhaps she will need something. Have the kindness to show the ticket to the conducter. I have telegraphed to Paris to her friends, who will meet her at the station. She is quiet as a dove. Should you find her agitated, give her a drop of this essence on sugar; here is the bottle. Monsieur Lambert, mademoiselle!"

He then helped along the invalid lady and put her in the corner of the coupe. He then, after arranging her with great kindness, stepped out, held Mr. Lambert by the hands and talked with French effusion, as the officials hustled passengers in and out.

"I trust you will have no trouble, adieu," said he, giving a final word of kindness to his fair patient and arranging her footstool.

"Oh, no! I dare say not," said Mr. Lambert, bowing to the lady and taking his seat by her side. "But what a powerful odor there is in the coupe—will it not disturb the lady?"

"Oh, no! I think not," said Dr. de La Belle; "I broke a bottle of cologne, as I was helping her in. It will all disappear in a few moments."

The train departed; and Mr. Lambert, who felt exceedingly wide awake, and who found Dr. de La Belle's cologne very strong, tried to draw his fair friend into a conversation. She was separated from him by a high basket of flowers, the doctor's last attention.

The poor insane woman would not answer a word, and from her immovable calm Mr. Lambert concluded that she was asleep.

When they arrived at Paris he determined that she should speak.

"Mademoiselle," said he, in a loud voice, "do awake and listen to me; I must leave you for a moment to go and find your friends."

He sought a long time, but could not find anybody who wanted a lady from Rouen.

He came back to the carriage very discontentedly, when, to his intense astonishment, he found a crowd around the compartment where the lady still sat. He went forward to see what was the cause of the excitement.

"Are you the man who traveled from Rouen in this coupe?" said a policeman.

"Yes."

"Do you know that this lady is dead? You have poisoned her with prussic acid! She has been dead four hours!" and the populace groaned.

The clergyman was speechless with horror. He tried to clear himself with all the earnestness of an innocent man; but his story was found a most improbable one. The police found on him the purse of the poor woman, and a bottle containing prussic acid!

It was the little bottle which Dr. de La Belle had forced upon him in the train.

Mr. Lambert, stunned, half dead, allowed himself to be carried to prison without resistance—he was past that. A day later he said:

"Take me to Rouen; I will unmask the villain; he can never face me!"

Two sergeants de ville, with other employes of the police in plain clothes, attended this dangerous criminal to Rouen in the railway, and drove to the house of Dr. de La Belle. Mr. Lambert was sure that at the sight of his face the assassin doctor would confess all.

Dr. de La Belle was engaged at the moment, and kept them some time waiting. When at last the police began to be troubled, the head sergeant bade them to be calm. "The house is guarded," said he; "he cannot escape."

Presently there entered a calm, elderly gentleman, with spectacles, which he removed as he looked at them.

"I beg your pardon for keeping you waiting," said he, "but did you want me? I am Dr. de La Belle."

Mr. Lambert trembled from head to foot. An abyss opened before him, of which he could not see the bottom. This was not at all the man whom he had met on Mont St. Catherine.

"You are not Dr. de La Belle at all!" said the unhappy man.

"I think that I can prove that I am," said the suave old doctor, smiling.

Alas! everything was against him. The English clergyman had fallen into the most terrible snare, laid by the most accomplished villain.

They returned to Paris.

"I wish I could meet him again with his white dog," said Mr. Lambert, throwing his hands in the air.

"White dog, did you say?" asked the sergeant de ville.

Some weeks passed, and the police became convinced that Mr. Lambert was innocent, but they were waiting for the real villain.

Mr. Lambert was taken, blindfolded and in the night, to a house, he knew not in what street, where he, however, was well lodged, and where he was allowed to read and to write, but was strictly watched.

Shortly after his new incarceration a valet arrived with his clothes, and asked him respectfully to make his toilette. A sergeant escorted him to a closed carriage, and drove toward the Champs Elysees.

"Look at every one who passes," says he.

Mr. Lambert looked, but saw nothing.

The next day the sergeant, elegantly dressed, came again in an open carriage, and by the side of the coachman sat a white pointer dog.

Mr. Lambert turned pale.

"You have seen that dog before?" said the sergeant.

"It is his dog," said Mr. Lambert.

"Keep calm, and look about you," said the policeman.

But they looked in vain. They saw no master for the dog.

"On the night that crime was committed this dog was found in Rouen, without a master," said the sergeant de ville.

Later, the prisoner was requested to make an evening toilette, and was escorted to a grand ball in a magnificent house in one of the best parts of Paris.

"You are serving the ends of justice," said the sergeant to him. "Be patient and observe the guests."

He was presented to the lady of the house, who received him very graciously, and who introduced him to her daughter. He talked with her and looked at the guests, but saw nothing.

Another week passed. He went to another ball in the same company. His young host, Monsieur de F., seated himself beside him, and drew carelessly before them the curtains of a large window, which filled half the room.

It was not long before Mr. Lambert heard the well-known voice of the sergeant of police (who in the most irreproachable of black coats and white ties looked like a Conde or a Montmorenci) talking to a gentleman near him, of hunting.

"It is a long time since I have followed the hounds," answered the gentleman.

Mr. Lambert darted from his seat. "It is he!" said he. "It is Dr. de La Belle."

"Be silent," said Monsieur de F., "be silent," and he held him in his seat by main force.

In a moment they were rejoined by the sergeant de ville.

"I have heard him! It is his voice!" said Mr. Lambert, trembling all over.

"Perhaps we are still wrong," said that imperturbable individual. "Stay here without moving. I will draw the curtain. Look at every one who enters with a lady on his arm. When the suspected passes, press my arm without a word."

"Is it Monsieur de Bocage?" asked the host in a low voice of the officer. "Probably," said the policeman; "he was the lover of the unfortunate Blanche Villiers."

At this moment poor Lambert, peeping from behind the curtain, saw the well-known smiling face and jaunty figure of the doctor of Rouen pass with a young lady on his arm. He gripped the arm of the officer.

"It is he," said he, choking. The sergeant de ville drew the curtain quickly. "The chain is complete," said he; "we only wait for the dog. Mr. Lambert, your imprisonment will be short. One visit more, and you are free!"

The next day a close carriage, with the white pointer tied under the seat, called for Mr. Lambert.

"I shall conduct you to his door, but you must enter alone," said the friendly sergeant. "You are not afraid?"

"Afraid!" said the Englishman. "I only desire to kill him."

"No, no personal violence, please. You would spoil a very pretty job," said the officer. "Coachman, drive to the house of M. de Bocage, Avenue Josephine."

When Mr. Lambert, pale as death, rang the bell of the inner door, M. de Bocage, a Parisian swell, just putting on his gloves, opened it himself.

He started back, horrified, but soon composed himself.

"You wish to see me, sir?" said he.

"Yes, you wretched murderer!" said the Hon. and Rev. Lambert, "I do wish to see you!"

M. de Bocage retreated several steps.

"You are mad," said he.

"I have come to unmask you, villain!"

"You are deceived, my brave gentleman," said M. de Bocage, and, reaching behind him, he caught up a pistol and discharged it full in the face of the Englishman.

At the noise and the fall of the clergyman, who was stunned and blinded for a moment, the two sergeants and several policemen entered the room, accompanied by a white pointer, who leaped up and caressed Monsieur de Bocage.

"Down, Thanor, down!" said the murderer, forgetting himself.

"The chain is complete," said the sergeant joyfully.

"Monsieur de Bocage, alias Dr. de La Belle, you stand charged with the murder of Mademoiselle Blanche Villiers, in a coupe of the railway, which left Rouen at 1 o'clock at night on the 13th inst., a crime which you sought to affix to this gentleman. (Throw a pitcher of water in his face; the pistol ball was drawn this morning, while Monsieur de Bocage took his chocolate—he is not hurt.)"

So saying, the sergeant revived the Englishman, and took Monsieur de Bocage from his luxurious chamber toward twenty years of the galleys.

The wretch looked back.

"It was you, Thanor, after all," said he, caressing the white pointer.

"Yes," said the sergeant, encouragingly; "had you but remembered to give the poor thing a pill of strychnine!"

The Hon. and Rev. Mr. Lambert returned home much better. He had certainly taken the advice of this unknown medical adviser, and had varied his usual life considerably. He never traveled in a coupe at night again with veiled ladies, nor did he ever get over the horror of having ridden from Rouen to Paris with a corpse.

He had the curiosity to take the doctor's prescription to an apothecary in London, who analyzed it.

"A powerful stimulant, sir," said he; "we should not recommend you to use it very frequently. Still, in extreme cases of depression, it might be well."

Mr. Lambert never lost his admiration of the French police. They were, he thought, a very accomplished set of actors.

Turks and High Schools.

"I wasted," said an old Turk, "ten years of my life in one of the high schools. In consequence of this I know nothing. Had I gone to the schools of the Softas I might have become a great teacher. A high school teaches nothing that people want to know. For instance, they teach botany. They spend weeks in explaining to a young man that a rose is a rose! What earthly use is that to any one? If a man knows a rose when he sees it, he knows it without having learned it in a book. If he does not know that it is a rose, no book will ever make him care to know what it is. High schools never did good to any body in this country." The Turk was partly right. As in everything else, so in education, the methods adopted by the Turks are mere apish imitations of what is found in Europe, and always remain unmeaning forms of exercise, a weariness to both teacher and scholar.—"Turkish Life in War Times"—Dwight.

—Thirty years ago, a laboring Irishman at Shandakin, Ulster County, N. Y., took a fatherless nephew into his family, fed and clothed him and sent him to the Gilboa Academy to emphasize the country school education he had given him. The Gilboa Monitor says this uncle is now an aged pauper in the county poorhouse, and that the nephew he so well cared for is Bonanza Mackay.

Boxing a Sewing Machine.

"Say, my dear," observed Mr. Spoopendyke, straightening up and scratching his ear, "what did the man say about boxing up this sewing machine?"

"Why, he said take the cover off and—"

"Ive got the cover off," snorted Mr. Spoopendyke. "Did he say to take it off twice? Ain't once binding on this machine?"

"Certainly," replied Mrs. Spoopendyke; "then you take the top off and—"

"Did that man say anything about boxing up this machine? That's what I asked you," vociferated Mr. Spoopendyke. "I know all about the cover and top. You can't teach me anything about the top and cover. I want some information about this dod-gasted bird-cage-looking arrangement! Did he say whether I was to take that off of anything?"

"The machine goes in that," fluttered Mrs. Spoopendyke. "And then this slat cover nails over it."

"Now, that's the way I like to hear a woman talk," remarked Mr. Spoopendyke, betaking himself cheerily to his work. "If you'd always answer straight up, we'd have been moved a week ago."

"But you must screw the top on the bottom of the top, and tie the cover underneath," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, who, having been complimented on a detail, determined, woman like, to know all about it.

"What stable have you been boarding in now?" roared Mr. Spoopendyke, dropping the hammer on his foot. "What asylum for indigent jackasses did you get that scriptural quotation from? How'm I going to screw the measly top on the dod-gasted bottom of itself? Where's the screw that does that? Just jerk your thumb in the direction of the interconvertible screw that will screw a thing on in that way!"

"Why, you just turn the top over on the bottom, the man said, and screw it to the top; that—"

"Come over!" yelled Mr. Spoopendyke, tugging at the works from which he had neglected to take the thumb-screw. "Come over the way the man said for you to! Hear me? Come over! There can't any dod-gasted piece of seventy-dollar ingenuity get the best of the manufacturer when Spoopendyke's within reach! Come over and screw on the bottom, like the man said! Coming over?" and Mr. Spoopendyke's hands slipped, landing him on the back of his neck in the crate his wife had purchased to box the machine in.

"Never mind, dear," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, trembling with apprehension for the safety of the machine. "Let the man come and do it himself, if he knows so much about—!"

"Dod-gast the man!" howled Mr. Spoopendyke, springing to his feet and moving on the works once more. "Think he can break this measly old cast-iron imitation of an inebriate home any quicker'n I can?" and he grasped the top of the instrument and hauled away till his eyes hung out. "Come over to the dulcet bottom and be screwed on. Oh, come where the glory of being screwed to the bottom of the top awaits thee. Come over and see this miracle of plastering the top and bottom of the same thing together as performed by Spoopendyke, the apostle of impossibilities! Come to the dod—!" But here the thumb-screw broke, driving Mr. Spoopendyke into the closet like a spike, where he sat beholding the mutilated top in his arms and looking dazed.

"Are you hurt, dear?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, rushing toward him.

"Hurt!" shrieked Mr. Spoopendyke. "Am I hurt! D'ye see that thumb-joint hanging to that measly screw? Wow-w-w!" squealed Mr. Spoopendyke, dancing to his feet, and dashing the machinery into the crate. "Get in there, quick!" and he tumbled the rest of the business in after, where it struck corner-wise in spite of his effort to drive it in with his leg. "Is this what the man said?" and he jumped at it with both feet. "Bottom appear to be coming any nearer to the top from where you stand?" and he whirled the crate around and then kicked at the corner of the machine. "Does that screw strike you as beginning to take hold? Got a notion that this machinery can be moved from here to Hackensack without scratching any paint off the farmhouses along the road?" and concentrating himself in one last effort, Mr. Spoopendyke turned the crate over on the machine and breathed hard.

"You've done that splendidly," cooed Mrs. Spoopendyke, anxious to restore peace between Mr. Spoopendyke and the wreck of her sewing-machine. "It isn't exactly the way the man said, but I know—"

"Oh, you know all about it!" howled Mr. Spoopendyke. "If I could build a front door and a veranda to your information, I'd stand you in a tub of salt water and start a summer resort! Oh, you're posted on what to do! You understand mechanics! Some day I'll fit you out with a price-list and a strike, and start a rolling-mill!" and Mr. Spoopendyke went for his hat and tore out of the room.

"It's pretty well scratched, but otherwise it is all right," commented Mrs. Spoopendyke, examining the wreck. "And I'll get the man to box it."—Brooklyn Eagle.

PITH AND POINT.

—Almost anybody can run into debt; but nearly everybody has to crawl out of it.

—A man who insists on the right to hold his own opinion is always wanting to give it way, even when it is not asked for.

—A young man who had married a bad tempered woman was one day provoked to correct her. The lady complained to her father who, knowing her character, followed the example of her husband, and, boxing her ears, said: "There, now; go and tell the fellow that I am even with him, he has beaten my daughter and I have boxed his wife's ears."—Chicago Tribune.

—Two juvenile lemonade merchants were fiercely competing for the patronage of their playmates, when one of them, destined to be a future Vanderbilt, squelched his rival and controlled the market by spreading the report that "the reason that Jimmy Bangs gave more sugar in a one-cent glass was because there was a dead rat in his pump."—Boston Commercial Bulletin.

—The New York Ledger asks: "Is a man to be deemed insane because he kisses the girl to whom he is engaged in an enthusiastic and boisterous manner?" We should say no, emphatically. The fact that he is engaged to a girl in an enthusiastic and boisterous manner should not deprive him of the right to kiss her, any more than if he had engaged himself to her in a quiet and orderly manner.—Norristown Herald.

—They were raised here in Austin, but she did not know much about gardening; at the same time, she did not care to expose her ignorance to her husband. They had only been married a short time when he said: "I notice the asparagus is about ripe; don't you want to go out into the garden and get some?" She replied: "I'll tell you what we will do. We will go out together. You climb up and shake the tree, and I'll catch them in my apron as they fall."—Texas Siftings.

—"No, sir-ee," remarked the old resident, "my wife did't bring me a cent. But it's all my fault. I wouldn't have it. The morning of the day we were married, I says to her, says I: 'Maria, how much money have you got?' Says she: 'John, I've got just twenty-five cents.' Then, says I, 'Come with me,' and I took her down to the canal and had her throw that quarter into the drink. I wasn't going to have no woman twitting me about spreadin' around on her money."—Lowell Citizen.

—One was carrying home a cent's worth of yeast in a pitcher, and the other was going to the store for a bar of soap in bulk. "Family you live in going away this summer?" asked the girl with the yeast. "Well, they did talk of it," replied the other, "but the dressmaker disappointed them. Are your folks going?" "They were going, but the milk bill came in this morning and I guess they will have to put off the trip. Dear me, but the rich have their troubles as well as us poor folks. —It is almost impossible to get any information out of a railroad man. There comes a shrill whistle, followed by a tremendous shock. You ask the conductor what's the matter, and he is unable to give a guess, notwithstanding half a dozen cars are off the track and knocked into kindling wood. This should teach you, gentle reader, never to ask questions of a conductor. The boy who brings water through the cars, however, will furnish the full particulars, with liberal embellishment born of his boundless imagination.—Boston Transcript.

The Average Newspaper Lie Analyzed.

The average bare-faced newspaper lie, when analyzed, dwindles into utter insignificance. For instance: "A man in Troy, Ga., saw what he thought was a bunch of snakes. He fired thereat, and a monster ten feet long straightened himself out and made for the swamps, gobbling like a turkey." It will be seen that the item contains no mention of the character of the man who observed this wonderful object. He might have "had 'em again." If so, his statements are not entirely trustworthy. But admitting that the man was not afflicted with delirium tremens, there is still a plausible explanation. He might have been mistaken, in the excitement of the moment, as to the real length of the object which "made for the swamps." It possibly was not more than two feet long. Again, the thing at which he fired might have been a cow, and its tail might have been so disposed as to present the appearance of a snake, and the "gobbling like a turkey" might have been the bellowing the gentle bovine sometimes gives vent to when surprised by an excitable man with a shotgun. And there's yet another theory that may be advanced. The man from Troy might have seen a turkey with ruffled feathers, and might have imagined those feathers to be a bunch of snakes; and he might have shot the turkey just accurately enough to scatter some of those feathers to the winds in such a way as to cause them to appear like the elongated body of an antediluvian monster. While there is no desire herein to demonstrate the absurdity or even falsity of the quoted statements, it must be said that the items would have looked much better published after this fashion: "A man in Troy, Ga., shot at a turkey and missed it, and the turkey ran, gobbling, into the swamp."—Chicago Herald.

THE CHILTON VIEW.

W. H. LAWRENCE, Editor.

CLANTON, ALA., SEPT. 7, 1882.

In the attack upon Remleh, the Duke, of Connaught, the son of the Queen of England, commanded the brigade, of Highlanders, that formed the centre of the line of battle.

Maj. W. P. Burks, of the firm of W. P. Burks & Son, of Montgomery was married on Monday last to Miss Lucy Ledbetter, one of the fairest daughters of the capital city.

Williams Renominated.

The Democratic Congressional Convention, for this district, was held at Dadeville last Wednesday. The gentlemen before the Convention were, Hon. Thos. Williams, of Elmore, Chancellor N. S. Graham, of Macon, and Col. J. R. Dowdell, of Chambers, Before the balloting commenced the name of Chancellor Graham was withdrawn at his own request.

Three ballots were had. On the first ballot Williams received 123½ and Dowdell 66½. There was no material change in the second ballot. At the call for the third ballot Col. Dowdell's name was withdrawn, and on motion of Mr. Armstrong, of Macon, the rules were suspended and Col. Williams was nominated by acclimation. Col. Williams is undoubtedly the strongest candidate that could have been put out, and his election is assured.

It is rumored that since his nomination the Independent candidate, McCoy, has lost heart and announces that he will not run against him.

In speaking of our present convict labor system. The Selma Times of September 5, says:

Some months ago The Times had a great deal to say upon the convict question. The objections to the present system, practically and theoretically, were elaborately argued and conclusively demonstrated. Grave mistakes in the executive management of the State penitentiary were shown as possibilities and actualities easily arising out of the present imperfectly conceived plan, and disgraceful occurrences were brought to light as the inevitable consequences of those mistakes. This exposition was not relished in many directions, and constantly we were met with the answer that necessity induced the existing arrangement, and that though it was fallible, it was the best possible. We were called to accouna for tearing down the existing good without offering a better subsitute. We were characterized as dyspeptic malcontents, and the motive of onr course was insinuated to be other than the correct one asserted. Dangerous independentism, improper political sympathies, idle desire for undeserved notoriety and scores of equally incorrect and inadequate objects were assigned by those who by such desperate plans of defense only exhibited a consciousness of the truth we were telling and exposed the perverted machinery of their own consciences in judging other's mainsprings of action by their own.

We have endeavored constantly to make valuable suggestions for the remodeling of the existing arrangements. The idea heretofore suggested of revolutionizing the State road-working system and of hiring to road contractors at a low rate the convict force in order that the public roads of Alabama might be made decent at a tolerable expense, was not without merit, but it was open to many objections in the troublesome detail of keeping the convicts safely. We will now offer another plan, which we trust will be considered more practicable, since the Tuskaloosa Times and doubtless other papers think "it is in order for those editors" to do something of the kind.

It will be remembered that soon after Gov. Cobb became Governor he advertised a lease of the entire penitentiary for a period of years. This proposition, after it had gone so far in its effects as to take the convicts out of the hands of various smaller contractors, was abandoned because of the alleged legal technicality that it would be contrary to law since it took the convicts out from under the authority of the State Warden, the only legal custodian. Another result of the proposition to lease was finally the division of the convicts among certain bidders for the lease. The only changes made were the concentration of the convicts in fewer hands and a slight increase in the State's income from them. The real evils of the system were not at all relieved, but on the contrary were probably increased.

Now a very plausible suggestion to offer is that the legislature shall make changes in the running machinery of the penitentiary so that the Governor can lease the penitentiary to some one firm. The conditions of the lease should be that the firm shall take all the force of the penitentiary at not less than some fair price named by the Governor, and shall work them at one place; that a secure prison perfectly safe, complete and healthy, shall be erected by the firm at that place; that the State Warden shall reside there and continue his supervision of the convicts with all or even more power than he now has; that a physician of unquestioned capacity and integrity shall be also employed by the State, who in conjunction with the Warden alone shall decide what men are able to work, and who shall have charge of the sanitary arrangements of the proposed prison. Various other minor or important details might be devised and included in such a proposition for a lease that would enhance the effectiveness and unobjectionableness in the new arrangement, but the above outline would be the substance of the design.

A Noble Man has Fallen.

JEMISON, ALA., Sept. 2, '82.

Died, at his home, in Jemison, Ala., Aug. 31st, 1882, Mr. W. L. Bandy. Consumption, that hydra foe of our race, which is annually laying beneath the cold clod, vast numbers of our fellow beings, was the disease of which he died. His sufferings, during the last two weeks of his illness, while undergoing the thousand struggles of death, are wholly indescrible. But it was all borne with a fortitude not often witnessed. He had recently made two visits, to the peninsular of Florida, with the hope of recuperating his health, but last spring returned to his home, Jemison, in dispair. All that physicians, kind friends, and loving hands could do for his relief, was done. His every want was promptly attended to. But all could not avail, for the fiat of Jehovah had gone forth that he must die, and in obedience to this heavenly mandate, just at seven o'clock P. M., Aug. 31st, the rider on the pale horse, with sickle in hand, cut the silver cord and passed him over to the shore of eternal repose. He leaves a devoted wife, three promising little boys, a kind brother, a loving sister, and many relatives and friends to deplore his loss. He possessed rather an eccentric mind, had quick perception sound judgment, and good business habits. We all realize the fact that we have lost a friend and a good citizen. But he is gone from among us. He sweetly sleeps in the arms of death. We cannot close this notice without offering a word of sympathy to those whose hearts are stricken with a sadness never before experienced. It is sad indeed to have our hopes dimmed, our happiness marred, and our dear ones borne "o'er the dark waves" by the angel of death, where we cannot hear their loving voice, nor ever more be animated by the manifestations of their generous hearts—to know that those bright and lustrous eyes, that so often flashed around upon those who stood near his dying bed, are closed in the shades of night. But death's cold wave does not divide the souls we love from ours.

And here let us turn our eyes and thoughts and hopes to that auspicious morn where the mighty challenge, issuing from the throne of the great I AM shall be heard ringing through all the empire of God

"O grave, where is thy victory?
O death where is thy sting?"

And no response can be made. It is then and there that tears shall be wiped from all faces, that death shall be swallowed up in victory, and that we shall all arise immortal victors—and with our dear ones

Hand in hand walk the golden streets above,
And chant the triumphs of Immanuel's love.
Oh, yes! we shall meet in a world that is bright,
Where God and the Lamb are the glory and light;
Where sorrow is ended and the tears are all dried,
And the love of the faithful no longer is tried.

The chief sportsman of Hartwell Ga., tells that he practised with a toy rifle until he could hit a nail with the little bullet every time, and then went frog hunting in the mill pond. Seeing a big specimen meditating on a log, he began firing. On the twenty-seventh round the game rolled into the water but when taken out it was found alive though terribly swolen. The frog had mistaken the bullets for flies, caught them in his mouth swallowed every one without discovering the error, and been finally carried overboard by the weight of lead.

POOR PAY.

A story is told of a kind-hearted Indian who sought to apologize for the poor sermon of his preacher. He delivered his apology thus: "poor pay, poor preach."

Hon. E. H. Fay. Superintendent of Public Education in Louisana, in his last report says:

1st, Additional funds are needed "to continue schools in the country for not less than six months in the year, and in the cities and towns for at least nine months in the year."

2nd, "Teachers enough, amply qualified, could be found within our own limits, if we could, by even respectable salaries, offer them inducements to enter the profession. As it is, the average salary of teachers in this State is a little over thirty dollars per month."

Is it any wonder that the cause of education, in the light of such a showing, should be encumbered with so many trifling teachers—teachers so-called? And this too in the face of the fact that the State has plenty of competent educators! Only thirty dollars per month! How can Lousiana hope for any improvement while so poor a pittance is all that is offered to the teachers of her public schools?

And yet in Alabama the average pay from the State, to the teachers of her schools, is less than Louisana pays?

The average monthly pay of teachers of colored schools is $23.15, while the average monthly pay of teachers of white schools is $22.98! No wonder that the State Superintendent bewails the presence in Alabama of so many "worthless and inefficient teachers." If the old Indian's philosophy is correct "poor pay, poor preach," it certainly applies with melancholy fitness and force to the educational situation in Alabama. And it finds expression in words as simple and as sad: "poor pay, poor teach."

What is to be done in an emergency so grave? This is the solemn and important problem to be solved by the wisdom and patriotism of our lawmakers recently elected. Let them begin at once to face the situation: let them ponder well and devise wisely.

Alabama Progress.

Montgomery has over 3,000 more population than any county in the State and Winston has the smallest population. Dallas has the largest colored population by over a thousand, Montgomery coming next and Winston has the smallest, there being only 17 negroes in that county with only 4 voters. Greene has the largest percentage of negro population and Winston, of course, the least. Winston and Covington have each only one foreign born citizen.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a Fieri Facias issued out of the Clerk's office of the Circuit Court of chilton county, and State of Alabama, and to me directed, whereby I am commanded to make the amount of a certain judgment recently obtained against Joseph W. Foshee and in favor of Le Grand & co., out of the goods, chattels lands and tenements of the said Joseph W. Foshee, I have levied on the following property, to-wit: The south half of the northeast quarter of section 2, township 21, range 14; also the north half of northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 1, township 21, range 14, in chilton county Alabama and containing 200 acres.

Therefore, according to said command I shall expose for sale, at Public Auction, all the right, title, and interest of the above named Joseph W. Foshee for cash, in and to the above described property, on Monday the 2nd day of October 1882, during the legal hours of sale, at the court House door in the town of clanton.

Dated at clanton Alabama this the 2nd day of September 1882.

Mr. R. M. Goodgame, who some ne since was removed to the jail Montgomery county for safe keep- , gave bail, and, with his coun- , Col. R. H. Knox, returned to nton, Saturday last.

The Rev. Mr. Shores, than whom, no better or more faithful laborer in his calling can be found, will conduct the camp meeting services this week. He will be assisted by ministers from adjoining counties.

We regret very much to hear of the death of Mr. W. L. Bandy, at Jemison. He leaves a family and many relatives besides a host of friends to mourn his loss. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones.

We are requested by the President of the University of Alabama, to state that Chilton county is entitled to three students at that institution free' of tuition. Our county should be represented at this noble institution.

The firm of Wheeler & Smith, general real estate agents, and agents for the sale of Louisville & Nashville and South & North Ala. R. R. Lands at Birmingham, has been dissolved. Mr. H. L. Wheeler will continue the business. See his card.

As a summer resort, Clanton ranks deservedly high. Being free from the malaria of the low country, as well as the chronic diseases of the mountains, it can hardly be surpassed for healthfulness, and visitors are always cordially welcomed.

Low Rates.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad will sell Round-Trip Excursion Tickets from Montgomery and all stations north and from Memphis and all stations north, to the Louisville Exposition from September 4th to October 19th, and to the Cincinnati Exposition, from September 4th to October 5th, at four (4) cents per mile for the round trip. Tickets sold any day in the week and good to return ten days from date of sale.

Mr. John Duncan, our night operator at the depot, has been transferred to the office at Newcastle, where he takes the position of agent and operator. We regret to lose him. His promotion is evidence that he has been a faithful workman. Mr. Williamson, of Verbena, takes his place here.

Considerable excitement was created on the streets, one evening last week, by the advent of a supposed lunatic. It is a sad fact, that there are as many of these unfortunates, running at large, or in jails, as there are in the State lunatic asylum, which can only accomodate about 500, and is always full.

Bro. Miller, of the Mountain Home, grinds out State news thusly: Every man, woman and child in Verbena feels an interest in that grand structure, the Hotel. This, doubtless, grows deeper and more intense as the dinner hour approaches.

Brother Lawrence, of the Chilton View, is the editorial Good Samaritan of Alabama in finding objects of charity and making a strong appeal.

Grand sire Boyd, of Clear Creek, is seventy eight years old, is hale, hearty ,and active, has never used spectacles, and can shoot a rifle with as much precision as "any man." He settled in Bibb county, in 1819, when the only market places were Tuscaloosa on the Warrior river and Gunter's and Gillo's landings, on the Tennessee river.—Gewher in Shelby Sentinel.

It is an invariable rule in every well regulated newspaper office never to publish a communication unless the name of the author be furnished. We call attention to this from the fact that we have received a communication from some one signing himself "Commisrioners." No name is given, and however much we might wish to publish it, we cannot break our rule. It is possible that the writer is a member of a "commission" devised to improve upon the art of expressing the English language, judging from his excellent (?) grammar, sound (?) logic and faultless (?) rhetoric. It seems that his object is to give us "hail Columbia," on account of a recent article in this paper. If the writer will furnish his name, his communication will be published.

Jemison Jottings.

Some sickness.

Rev. Geo. Lee filled his regular appointment, at this place, last Sunday.

The vacation session, of the Jemison Institute, has closed. The school building will be ceiled and repaired before the second regular session begins, which will be on the first Monday in October.

Misses Alice and Cora Shelby, are visiting relatives in Coosa county.

We understand that an act has been passed in Congress for a mail route, to be established between Jemison and Maplesville.

The "Edward's" base ball club, of this place, and "Scotland" club, of Bugsnorten, played two match games recently, in which the "Edwards" were victorious both times. The score, of the first game was: "Edwards" 32, "Scotland" 28; of the second game, "Edwards" 17, "Scotland" 5. A game was also played between the Smith club, of this place, and the second Scotland club, of Bugsnorten, the score stood 8 to 1, in favor of the Smith club.

Died, in this place, Aug. 31. Mr. Wilson L. Bandy, he was a thorough gentleman in every respect, one who was liked by all who knew him, he leaves a wife, three children, and quite a host of relatives and friends, to mourn his loss, we sympathize with the bereaved ones.

Died at Pinehill, one mile South of Jemison, Sept. 4th, Miss Mary Scaggs.

We will omit several items of interest for want of space. Z. Y. X.

A real estate dealer advertises in a Dakota newspaper: "I can be found either at the Gold Mine playing 'freeze out,' at Mitchell's Exchange betting on the age of 'old hosses' with Brown, or at my residence on Oak street, perusing the Scriptures."

There was one woman young and very demure, among the passengers in an Arizona stage coach, and when a gang of masked robbers appeared, she told the five men in the vehicle to hand their watches and money to her. They did so and hastily hid the articles under her clothing. When the highwaymen came to her in search, she blushingly begged them to be content with examine her pockets, vowing with upturned eyes and solemn tones that she had nothing concealed. They gallantly complied and went away with only a few stray dollars, missing things worth about $10,000.

WHY THE COWS CAME LATE.

Crimson sunset burning
O'er the tree-fringed hills;
Golden are the meadows,
Ruby flushed the rills,
Quiet in the farm-house
Home the farmer hies;
But his wife is watching,
Shading anxious eyes,
While she lingers with her pail beside the barn-yard gate,
Wondering why her Jenny and the cows come home so late!

Jenny, brown-eyed maiden,
Wandered down the lane;
That was ere the daylight
Had begun to wane.
Deeper grow the shadows;
Circling swallows cheep;
Katydids are calling;
Mists o'er meadows creep.
Still the mother shades her eyes beside the barnyard gate,
And wonders where her Jenny and the cows can be so late!

Loving sounds are falling,
Homeward now at last
Speckle, Bess and Brindle
Through the gate have passed.
Jenny, sweetly blushing,
Jamie, grave and shy,
Take the pails from mother,
Who stands silent by.
Not one word is spoken as that mother shuts the gate,
But now she knows why Jenny and the cows came home so late!

Talking About People.

Speaking ill of the dead is an act held up to reprobation by universal and popular consent. Sympathy for the weaker side of human nature amid the pathos excited by death disarms criticism at the open grave. Out of a sense of conventional propriety we touch lightly upon the dead man's faults. In life we treated him with enmity and contempt. In death we have no feeling save tenderness. Hate and envy once stifled this feeling, but pass away when the object that excited them is no more.

We know people who are careful to avoid crushing a worm, and yet would go out of their way to cripple an enemy for life. They carry their hatreds into a settled purpose of inflicting pain. They extol the virtues of a good hater. Dr. Johnson was willing to like any man but an American. A prominent statesman wished on his death-bed that he had lived to hang a political foe. Brute nature has nothing akin to this.

Thackeray said with a touch of satirical humor: "If we may not speak of the lady who has just left the room, what is to become of conversation and society?" The novelist forbears answering the question; are we left to infer that society would languish and conversation become a lost art? In some circles the man is a bore who has not paraded the skeleton from a neighbor's closet, or hovered like Asmodeus over the house-tops! The best mind is not he who expresses the best thought, but the clever fellow with a comic squint and Jack-Pudding aspect who flings arrows from his quiver that wound the tenderest heart. His talent for amusing consists in mimicking sensitive people, and stringing them on the skein of his wit. Talking about others is his chief amusement. Gossip is the staple of his story, and scandal the supreme effort of his brain.

We are little aware how great a social evil this habit is. It spreads contagion in clubs and parlors when sanctioned as a social aim from an impulse towards something that resembles wit. Turning our neighbors into butts of ridicule, or making them subjects of captious criticism, is worse than folly and bad taste. It is an offense against manners and morals, and deserves a unique punishment, though the offender adjusts his personal relations so as to escape its consequences, and is not amenable to law. Of course, personalities are the life of some kinds of discourse. But a clever author says: "There are two kinds of gossip, the good-humored and the scandalous: the gossip that touches lightly on faults and foibles and amusing incidents and curious contrast; and the gossip that peers into the privacy of domestic life and either invents or misrepresents. The latter no gentleman will indulge in or listen to; the former is the salt of ordinary conversation. We cannot help taking an interest in our fellows; and there is no reason why we should not, as long as that interest is not malignant."

Colonel Newcome disliked "Tom Jones" on account of the rakish character of the hero. But the "Spectator," "Don Quixote," and "Sir Charles Grandison" formed a part of his traveling library. "I read these," he used to say, "because I like to be in the company of gentlemen, and Sir Roger de Coverley and Sir Charles Grandison and Don Quixote are the finest gentlemen in the world." Such an instinct for gentility and honest worth, influencing a man's character and taste in the choice of books, rarely co-exists with the vulgarity of mind of the quidnunc and tattler. Well-bred people are courteous to men of all castes. When their backs are turned they do not say, with a shrug and grimace, what they fear to say to their faces. Sincerity is the work of a gentleman. Emerson writes that an old man, who added an elevating culture to a large experience in life, said to him: "When you come into the room, I think I will study how to make humanity beautiful to you." A life of poverty were worth living with such a hero for a companion, and society has need of superior minds of this caste.—The Interior.

—The cinnamon bears of Sahoma County are evidently not fond of hugging. One day recently, in the mountains northwest of Healdsburg, Johnnie Martin and two young lady friends, Misses Euphemia and Rofie Moffet, went out fishing in one of the trout streams. Noon found them several miles from home, and while lunching in a pleasant little flat in the creek bottom, a good-sized cinnamon or black bear broke through the brush near by and took a look at them. After peering down Johnnie's pocket pistol a minute or two bruin left, and the party left, too.

—A peculiar system of mortgaging farms is used in Switzerland. A farmer may borrow of a dozen men successively, the simple record in an official book showing their order. If he fails to pay, a successor is found for him by beginning at the bottom of the list of debtors, and calling on each in his order to assume all the debts and manage the farm or step aside and lose his claim.—N. Y. Herald.

The Army Worm.

This worm at present is attracting considerable attention by its appearance in various sections of the country. It is, even now one of the debated questions of entomology, and needs more close observation before all will agree as to whether it is single or double brooded in the Northern States. Also its manner of passing the winter, the causes necessary to its occasional great development, and the reason why it marches every now and then. For it is usually found with us as a simple cut worm, unnoticed, feeding at night and hiding at the roots of the grass during the daytime. It was formerly claimed that St. Louis was about as far North as it was found to be double brood, but latterly even the latitude of Iowa is believed by many to possess two broods a year. We recently visited a field in the southern part of Muscatine County where a week or ten days ago all the heads of timothy in parts of the field were alive with the army worms, and although we searched carefully we could not find a single worm, only some of the cast-off moltings that were left clinging to a portion of the heads. The worms had descended into the ground where they have changed into pupae.

Now, if there is but one brood a year they will not emerge from their subterranean home until the next spring, but if there be two broods, in about six weeks the army worms will again be at work, very likely, however, in small numbers, for they have a great host of insect enemies, prominent among which are the red-tailed tachina fly, (Nemeraea Oucaniai), the yellow-tailed tachina fly, (Exorista Flavicunda), and a number of beetles and small ichneumon flies. These enemies usually keep the worms in check, but frequently they are baffled in their good work.

The worm when full-grown is from an inch and a quarter to an inch and a half long. It is striped lengthwise with alternating stripes of dirty white and a greenish brown cast. An observer, who has been watching the worm feed, describes their method to us as follows:

They creep up the spears of timothy, sometimes pausing half way up the head and often reaching the very top. Then they bend the head over into a curve, the worm occupying the concave side of the curve, and commence feeding, retreating backward until the head is nearly if not entirely destroyed. This statement seemed to us to be fully confirmed by the aspect of the timothy heads, and the moltings of the worms left as mementoes of their visit. The blades of the hay also had a ragged appearance where their egdes had been eaten, while the clover that grew among the hay was untouched. Just over the line in Louisa County is another field, two miles distant from the first, where over four acres of timothy were entirely destroyed.

From specimens reared in captivity, the age of the worm has been estimated to be from fifteen to thirty days. Then they descend into the ground a few inches, where they spin no cocoons, but in simple little earthen cells change into richly-colored dark pupæ, averaging two-thirds of an inch in length. After seventeen days pass away, they make their next appearance, this time in the role of pretty fawn-colored moths, expanding an inch and a half, with the principal marking a simple dot near the center of each front wing. From sixteen to seventeen days is the average life of the moth, during which the eggs are deposited between the folded edges of a blade of grass near the base, and are covered with a white, glistening fluid.

Years ago, Dr. Fitch, who was one of the earliest observers of the insect, advanced the theory that the army worm years were unusually wet, preceded by unusually dry, summers. This theory, like all others, has its friends as well as foes, the latter arising from the fact that occasional local exceptions do occur, but the greater weight of testimony is in its favor, consequently it is generally accepted. The summer of 1881, in this vicinity, was very dry, while this season is exactly the reverse.

It is a commonly known fact that the army worm may be kept out of a field by surrounding it with a ditch, from eight to twelve inches deep, taking care the sides toward the field shall be perpendicular. The worms fall into it and can not climb the perpendicular sides. They can now be killed in various ways. Some farmers drag a log through the ditch and thus crush them. Others have holes in the bottom of the ditch about a foot deeper, and from sixteen to twenty feet apart, into which the worm drops while attempting to escape. They are killed by covering them with straw and burning it, or by burying with dirt and pressing it down. If a field of hay is already infested so as to be destroyed, the best thing to be done ordinarily is to plow it under while the worms are young and plant some other crop. Fortunately for the farmers, two army-worm years in one locality rarely, if ever, follow each other.—Alice B. Walton, in Iowa State Register.

—At Rockingham, N. C., recently, Mrs. Gay heard a sound resembling the bursting of a gun-cap in an adjoining room, and looking in the room was astonished to see a blaze of fire ascending from the floor near where two children were seated. The blaze apparently ascended to the roof and went out. About an hour later Mrs. Gay returned to the dining-room, when a ball of fire nearly as large as a child's head came in the direction of her and seemed to strike her in the breast, then burst in three or more streams of fire, the fire quickly going out. Mrs. Gay was considerably stunned, and it was several hours before she recovered from the shock.

—A "paper festival" recently held in Cleveland is described by the Leader of that city as "a most unique and enjoyable occasion." Every young woman present—and they attended the festival in scores—wore a paper costume. "A bewildering multitude of maiden forms were gliding about," says another report, "and they were decked in paper suits of a thousand brilliant hues and resembling so many fairies." There were blue dresses and white dresses, black dresses and red dresses; there were dresses of all shades of color and dresses of striped goods. Paper ruffles of many a delicate hue encircled white throats, and headgears were worn constructed of the same material.

Giving and Receiving Hospitality.

It is a great pleasure to many country housekeepers to show hospitality to their friends during the summer months. If they have pleasant and commodious homes and ample means of entertainment, they love to surround themselves with a circle of friends and enjoy the reflection from these chosen faces of the good things provided them. There may be a secret pride on the part of the hostess in permitting her guests to see the resources at her command, but it is certainly pardonable when those resources are at the disposal, for the time, of visiting friends.

If one has not a commodious home and ample means of entertainment, showing hospitality is often a great burden, though it may be cheerfully borne. It means added care and labor for the house-mother, who quite possibly is already overburdened, and expense which can be ill-afforded. Guests who disregard these considerations do not deserve to be themselves very much considered. There are places in every town and almost every neighborhood where at certain rates food and lodging will be furnished, and, therefore, those who claim hospitality for the sole sake of physical supplies can not claim either the rights or privileges of guests. They are dependent on the mere sufferance of their host, and may well be thankful for whatever they may receive.

Thomas Jefferson, after his retirement to Monticello, ruined himself financially by excessive hospitality, and reduced his children and grandchildren to poverty. He kept open house, and everybody who came (and everybody did come) was invited to stay for dinner. We do not remember to have seen a single commendation of this course, and Jefferson's example in this regard has found few followers. He gave to strangers and to thousands who came solely for the "loaves and fishes" what he should have saved for his own family, and he received in return no just equivalent. But having begun to keep open house, he, like many others, found no place to stop. A stop, however, must be made if one has thus begun, or disaster is sure to follow.

Families living in cities are sometimes compelled to break up housekeeping in order to keep their country friends from visiting them out of house and home. The expense for each guest may be inconsiderable—food, car fares, admissions to exhibitions and entertainments—but in the aggregate it mounts beyond the ability to pay. Families living in the country often close their houses and leave home in the summer to avoid the labor and expense of entertaining those who, without invitation, come to "stay a while." They can not afford to spend on guest what must be applied to paying the interest on the mortgage or the school bills of the children.

The host can not offer to the guest what is not his to give—he certainly ought not to do it—and the guest can not, in propriety or conscience, expect or accept what the host has no right to give. Kings receive due hospitality from Kings and Princes. When they condescend to visit those beneath them in rank and state, they do not expect to be served with dainties on gold plate. It is enough if the best the house affords is placed before them, though that best be the plainest fare on delft, and apologies in such cases are entirely out of order.

A fine sense of propriety on the part of the guest will enable him to adjust himself to the tone of the household of which, for the time, he or she forms a part. If admitted as one of the family, then in his measure the duties devolving on the various members of the family will devolve on the guest. A fine sense of propriety on the part of the host will enable him to so adjust household matters that his guest will be at ease and at liberty to enjoy whatever sources of entertainment there may be within reach. Here, as in every other social relation, the Golden Rule is a safe guide. A man has no more right to wrong himself than he has to wrong his friend, no more right to permit himself to be wronged than he has to stand silently by and see his friend injured. All this is very alphabetical, but to some it may be new and helpful.

As hosts are often made a mere convenience of by uninvited guests, so guests are aften induced to accept hospitality that they may be made subservient to the selfish interest of the host. Exchange is no robbery. Where parties trade, and both grow rich, there is no cause for complaint, but where the profit is all or chiefly on one side something is wrong.

If all people were honorable and high-minded and unselfish and possessed of a fine sense of propriety, such remarks as are made above would be quite uncalled for.—N. Y. Tribune.

Picnics.

Why, in the spring of the year, do picnics become epidemic, and young and old, rich and poor, rush off into the woods to eat their lunch under the trees, and be fed on by ticks and mosquitoes? It is simply because for tens of thousands of years man was in a nomadic condition. He wandered about with his family in the woods, living on berries and being annoyed by insects, and though man has become civilized and lives in a house, yet, nevertheless, about once a year, an irresistible desire to return to his old vagabond life comes over him, and he just has to go on a picnic, after which he cools down for the rest of the year and puts sweet oil on the tick bites. Just so with woman gardening. Until quite recently woman had to do all the hard work in the fields. She had to dig up the ground, plant the crop, and gather it, until it became second nature to her. Her husband was kind enough to encourage her to keep on by shaking a stick at her when she wanted to sit down and rest, but it was below his dignity to work. Such was the condition of woman from the beginning of time. It will be rememberod that Adam was too lazy to gather in the apples, so Eve had to do it for him. Of course all this is changed now. All that most women do in the way of hard work is to dress up and go to parties, but every sping she can not resist the impulse to put on her worst clothes, and drudge with a hoe out in the front yard, as she used to do thousands of years ago.—Toronto Globe.

—An improved stanchion has been invented that possesses at least one excellent feature. The frame is turned on pivots, so that the animal confined can turn its head and neck with as great ease as when tied to a rope or chain.—Chicago Times.

—A novel invention has recently been tested. It is an electric bell cord which conveys signals to a railroad engineer's cab by a mere touch. The invention is the work of a telegraph line repairer.—Chicago Journal.

—Although Philadelphia does not move quickly herself, she seems to be the home of motors. Mr. J. R. Blumenberg (the purchaser, not the inventor) is now dazing the Philadelphia mind with a miracle of ingenuity, which takes the wind completely out of Keely's sails, and will enable an ordinary house fire to run an ocean steamer. Bisulphide of carbon is the main material used.—N. Y. Sun.

—A French photographer claims the authorship of an invention that will take accurate impressions of the motions of a bird in full flight, which is a long advance on photographing a galloping horse. Twelve pictures are taken by this process in a second, of which less than one-fiftieth is used in the actual reception of impressions. The rest is spent in the movement of the hand which turns the instrument to bring the several plates successively into operation.

—The long-desired motor for small machines has, according to a foreign journal, at last appeared. It is adapted to driving sewing machines, watchmakers' tools, and similar light machines, and consists of a seat supported on a rack, which, slowly distending under the weight of the operator sitting on it, transfers its motion through gearing contained in the supporting box to the band pulley from which the machine is driven; the lever serves to lock the seat in any position, and a slight pressure of the feet upon the treadle raises the seat again, without the operator having to get up, and without stopping the motor. The treadle is adjustable, so as to suit the weight of the person at work, and the speed can be varied to suit the requirements of the work by the back pressure of the treadle. While a sewing machine requires 100 to 150 movements of the treadle per minute, this motor requires only four or five.

—A rare and valuable relic was dug up in Berlin, La., recently. It is a bronze medal 2⅝ inches in diameter and weighing five and a half ounces. It was struck to commemorate the evacuation by the British on the 17th of March, 1776, and was voted to General Washington by Congress. The medal is much rusted, but the figure of Washington, finely executed on both sides, is very plain.

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of Iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other Iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any Iron preparation made. In short, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice. DR. ROBERT SAMUELS.

A SONG FOR WOMEN.

Within a dreary, narrow room,
That looks upon a noisome street,
Half-fainting with the stifling heat,
A starving girl works out her doom.
Yet not the less in God's sweet air
The little birds sing free of care,
And hawthorns blossom everywhere.

Swift, ceaseless toil scarce winneth bread;
From early dawn till twilight falls,
Shut in by four dull, ugly walls,
The hours crawl round with murderous tread.
And all the while, in some still place,
Where intertwining boughs embrace,
The blackbirds build; time flies apace.

With envy of the folk who die,
Who may at last their leisure take,
Whose longed-for sleep none roughly wake,
Tired hands the restless needle ply.
But far and wide in meadows green
The golden buttercups are seen,
And reddening sorrel nods between.

Too pure and proud to sell her soul,
Or stoop to any gilded gain,
Through days of changeless want and pain
The seamstress earns a prisoner's dole.
While in the peaceful fields the sheep
Feed, quiet; and through heaven's blue deep
The silent cloud-wings stainless sweep.

And whether she be alive or dead
That weary woman scarcely knows,
But back and forth her needle goes,
In tune with throbbing heart and head.
Lo! where the leaning alders part
White-bosomed swallows, blithe of heart,
Above still waters skim and dart.

O God in Heaven! shall I, who share
[illegible]
[illegible] good,
[illegible]
Through the mossed stones stir the grass,
The lengthening shadows o'er them pass,
The meadow pool is smooth as glass.

Dark as Egypt's Night.—The origin of this phrase is found in the 10th chapter of Exodus, the 21st, 22d and 23d verses: "And the Lord said unto Moses: Stretch out thine hand toward heaven, that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt, even darkness that may be felt. And Moses stretched forth his hand toward heaven; and there was a thick darkness in all the land of Egypt for three days; they saw not one another, neither rose any one from his place for three days; but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings."

Lynch Law.—This term, as commonly in use in the United States, is a personification of violent and illegal justice. According to some authorities, the term was derived from a Virginia farmer named Lynch. But it can be traced to a much earlier date in Ireland. When, in 1493, James Fitzstephens Lynch was Mayor and Warden of Galway, he traded largely with Spain, and sent his son thither to purchase a cargo of wine. The young man squandered the money intrusted to him, but succeeded in running in debt for a cargo to a Spaniard, by whose nephew he was accompanied in the return voyage to Ireland, where the money was to be paid. Young Lynch, to conceal his defalcation, caused the Spaniard to be thrown overboard, and was received at home with great honor. But a sailor revealed to the Mayor of Galway the crime which his son had committed. The young man was tried before his own father, convicted, and sentenced to be hanged. His family and others determined to prevent the execution. The father, finding that the sentence could not be carried into effect the usual way, conducted his son to a window overlooking the public street, with his own hands fastened the halter attached to his neck to a staple in the wall and acted as his executioner. In the council books of Galway there is said to be a minute that James Lynch, Mayor of Galway, hanged his son, out of the window, for defrauding and killing strangers, without martial or common law, to show a good example to posterity.

Archimedes' Lever.—The famous Greek philosopher Archimedes was the author of the apothegm: "Give me a lever long enough and a prop strong enough and I will move the world." The saying arose from his knowledge of the possible effects of machinery; and however much it might astonish a Greek of his day, would now be readily admitted to be theoretically possible [illegible] it is practically impossible; for, in the words of Dr. Arnott: "Archimedes would have required to move with the velocity of a cannon ball for millions of years to alter the position of the earth by a small part of an inch. This feat of Archimedes is, in mathematical truth, performed by every man who leaps from the ground, for he kicks the world away from him whenever he rises, and attracts it again when he falls."

Stolen My Thunder.—This saying originated with John Dennis, an English dramatist born in 1657, and who died in 1734. The incident connected with its origin is found in Biographiæ Britannicæ, vol. v., p. 1[illegible]: "Our author, for the advantage of this play (Appius and Virginia), had invented a new species of thunder, which was approved of by the actors, and is the very sort that at present is used in the theater. The tragedy, however, was coldly received notwithstanding such assistance, and was acted but a short time. Some nights after, Mr. Dennis being in the pit at the representation of Macbeth, heard his own thunder made use of, upon which he rose in a violent passion, and exclaimed, with an oath, that it was his thunder. 'See,' said he, 'how the rascals use me! They will not let my play run, and yet they steal my thunder.'"

The Die is Cast.—When Cæsar, after anxious deliberation, decided on the passage of the Rubicon, rousing himself with a start of courage, he committed himself to fortune, with the above proverbial expression, often used by gamblers in desperate play. Having crossed the Rubicon, he exclaimed: "The die is cast."

A Bird in the Hand Is Worth Two in the Bush.—This saying originated from the following circumstance: Will Somers, the celebrated jester to Henry VIII., happened to call at Lord Surrey's, whom he had often, by a well-timed jest, saved from the displeasure of his royal master, and who consequently was always glad to see him, was on this occasion ushered into the aviary, where he found his lord amusing himself with his birds. Somers happened to admire the plumage of a kingfisher.

"By my lady!" said Surrey, "my prince of wits, I will give it you."

Will skipped about with delight, and swore by the great Harry he was a most noble gentleman. Away went Will with his kingfisher, telling all his acquaintances whom he met that his friend Surrey had just presented him with it.

Now, it so happened that Lord Northampton, who had seen this bird the day previous, arrived at Lord Surrey's just as Will Somers had left, with the intention of asking it of Surrey for a present to a lady friend. Great was his chagrin on finding the bird gone. Surrey, however, consoled him with saying that he knew Somers would restore it him if he (Surrey) promised him two another day.

Away went a messenger to the prince of wits, whom he found in raptures with his bird, and to whom he delivered his master's message. Great was Will's surprise, but he was not to be bamboozled by even the Monarch himself.

"Sirrah," said he, "tell your master that I am obliged for his liberal offer of two for one, but that I prefer one bird in the hand to two in the bush."

Hence originated this oft-repeated saying.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Flying Ship.

Almost every one has read of Ezekiel Green and his flying machine, and a great many boys and men have been quite sure that they could manufacture wings that would enable them to fly.

As long ago as the reign of James IV. of Scotland an Italian who pretended to be able to change common metals into gold, and who wasted a great deal of the King's money in this way, but all to no purpose, "took in hand to fly with wings" as far as France, and to be there before the King's ambassadors, who traveled in the ordinary way. He had a pair of wings made of feathers, and when these had been fastened upon him he flew off the wall of Stirling Castle, but only to fall heavily to the ground and break his thigh-bone.

The Abbot of Tarryland (for so he had been created by the credulous King) declared that the blame of this failure should be laid upon the fact that there were hen feathers in the wings, and that hens are more inclined to the barn-yard than to the skies—a very ingenious way of defending himself; but it could not quiet the twinges in his broken limb.

Another experiment, which was made three hundred years later, was more successful. It was tried on a convict from the galleys, whose life was not thought too valuable to risk, and when ready for flight he must have been an object capable of frightening all the birds of the air. "He was surrounded with whirls of feathers, curiously interlaced, and extending gradually at suitable distances in a horizontal direction from his feet to his neck." When first launched from a height of seventy feet, his feelings could not have been enviable, and the great mass of spectators watched him in almost breathless silence. But instead of falling, he went down slowly, and landed on his feet, with no inconvenience except a feeling of sea-sickness.

Nothing seems to have come of it, as men are not flying through the air yet; but the Flying Ship may possibly have led to the balloon. This strange scheme made quite a sensation in the year 1709, and the first account of it was written in Portugese. It was invented by a Brazilian priest, who wanted the King of Portugal to adopt it.

In an ancient document purporting to be an address made to this monarch we read: "Father Bartholomew Laurent says that he has found out an Invention, by the Help of which one may more speedily travel through the Air than any other Way either by Sea or Land, so that one may go 200 Miles in twenty-four Hours; send Orders and Conclusions of Councils to Generals, in a manner, as soon as they are determined in private Cabinets; which will be so much the more Advantageous to your Majesty, as your Dominions lie far remote from one another, and which for want of Councils can not be maintained nor augmented in Revenues and Extent.

"Merchants may have their Merchandize, and send Letters and Packets more conveniently. Places besieged may be Supply'd with Necessaries and Succours. Moreover, we may transport out of such Places what we please, and the Enemy can not hinder it."

This remarkable ship was made as nearly in the form of a bird as possible; the tail (not quite true to nature) being the stern, and the head the figure-head of the vessel. At the bottom were two queerly shaped wings "to keep the ship upright;" at the top, the sails, which rounded over like the body of the bird; the light body of the ship was scalloped at both ends, and in the cavity of each was a pair of bellows, to be blown when there was no wind; and there were globes of heaven and earth, two loadstones, and "a good number of large amber beads fastened in an iron wire net, which, by a secret operation, would help to keep the ship aloft."

The strange vehicle was supposed to accommodate ten or eleven men "beside the artist," and this last personage, "by the help of the celestial globe, a sea map and compass, takes the height of the sun, thereby to find out the spot of land over which they are on the globe of the earth." It was a very funny affair, but quite ingenious, considering how little the laws of gravitation, and many other things connected with the art of flying, were then understood; yet no such object has been seen making its way through the air, and a flying ship would be very apt to find itself on the ground or in the water.—Harper's Young People.

Borrowing Tools.

The needs of modern farming demand a great variety of tools; indeed the greatest difference between the farming of to-day and of twenty years ago is to be found in the great improvement in all kinds of tools, and the great saving of labor that their use accomplishes. Many of these tools are expensive and require considerable skill in their use and care to keep them in good repair, so that the small farmer who has only occasional use for them, and can ill afford to own them, is placed in the dilemma of not being able to do without them nor to buy them either; in his strait he is fain to borrow.

Now, if he will but be careful to observe two or three rules in borrowing, he will have little trouble in any good Christian neighborhood, in getting any tools he needs at any time the owners are not using them; but by neglect of them he will become an annoyance to the neighborhood, and unable to supply his needs without buying.

First of all no tool should ever be borrowed without the knowledge and consent of the owner, nor without an understanding as to when it is to be returned. Second, any borrowed tool should be returned immediately when it is no longer wanted, or when the owner requests, and in case of any damage the owner should be informed and satisfaction given. Simple as these rules are, and strange as it may seem that any one should neglect them, there is probably no one source of trouble between neighbors so fruitful as carelessness or wilful neglect of duty and common decency in these matters. It is extremely annoying, when in need of a tool to be unable to find it, and especially so when one does not know which of two or three careless neighbors to blame for the annoyance.

I know a man who makes great professions of religious faith, and whose sincerity I do not pretend to judge, who has had in constant use, for a year at a time, tools which belonged to a neighbor, and which said neighbor had to replace, not knowing where they were lost; but when he found out at last who was at fault, it made a great deal of hard feeling, which was a good deal worse than the loss of the tools.

It is a good plan to brand all tools with the owner's name, which will serve to remind honest persons where they belong and will often prevent their being neglected. It is also a good plan to keep a slate and pencil in the tool house on which a memorandum should be made when a tool is borrowed, and erased when it is returned; this will serve to remind the owner where to look for missing tools. With such precautions, and among decent neighbors, the farmer who owns good tools need not fear to follow the teaching "from him that would borrow of thee, turn thou not away." There are, however, neighbors and neighbors, and any one who wishes to keep his tools where he can find them when needed, will have to discriminate between the careless, unprincipled borrower, who never returns a borrowed tool till it is sent for, and the careful, conscientious man who always returns whatever he borrows, promptly and in good order.

It is often difficult, where several men are employed on the farm, to prevent their borrowing and lending tools without the knowledge of their employers; this is one of the most fruitful sources of trouble, and needs careful attention. No hired man should borrow or lend any tool without knowledge of his employer—and of the owner of the tool in question.—W. D. Philbrick, in New-England Farmer.

Ballooning.

We are now within a single year of the centenary of the first balloon, which was sent up on the 5th of June, 1783, by the brothers Montgolfier. Their balloon was inflated with heated air, but in the following August M. Charles employed hydrogen gas for the same purpose. In September the Montgolfiers attached a car to a fire-balloon, and placed in it the first aerial travelers—a sheep, a cock and duck. The cock's leg was broken by a kick from the sheep, but otherwise the strangely-assorted trio sustained no injury. In October the first human aeronaut, M. Francois Pilatre de Rozier, who was afterward killed in an attempt to cross from France to England, made his first ascent in a "captive" fire balloon tethered to the ground by ropes. In the following months, accompanied by the Marquis d'Arlandes, Le Rozier ascended in a free fire balloon; and ten days later MM. Charles and Robert ascended in a free balloon inflated with hydrogen gas. The first balloon was sent up from England about the same time, and in February, 1784, the first which crossed the channel, while in August of the same year the first human ascent from British ground was made by Mr. Tytler. Thirty-seven years elapsed before there was any definite advance on the achievements of the first two years of aeronautics; but in 1821 Mr. Green showed that hydrogen might be replaced by ordinary coal gas, and that a balloon might be inflated and dispatched wherever there was a gas manufactory capable of supplying the necessary quantity.—London Times.

—A Trinity County Californian wants people to believe an affidavit which he makes that he caught a full-grown panther by the tail and broke his back with a stone. He modestly refrains from adding that it was a panther which had devoured three men further up the creek, but the strain upon the self-control was awful.

A Mugharibee Bedaween at Devotion.

The Arab race is commonly divided into two sections. The "Ahl Hadr," or "dwellers in towns," and the "Ahl Bedoo," or "dwellers in the open." From the latter words is derived the well-known name Bedouin or Bedaween. The latter are the best known to European travelers, and have usually been described with great exaggeration. Among them all, widely dispersed as they are, community of origin and of modes of life results in producing a certain similarity. In person the Bedaween are rather undersized, active, and enduring, with well-formed features. Like all pastoral tribes which lead a roving life, frequent quarrels arise among them. The loneliness of the desert, and the absence of fixed law or civil order, render it necessary that every man be always ready to assert his rights and defend his person. Yet the raids on travelers which have made the name of Bedaween almost synonymous with brigand are comparatively rare, and are regarded by them as a kind of customs dues levied on those who will not pay for protection. In Asia most of the Bedaween pay little attention to the precepts of the Koran, and their religious belief is confined merely to a profession of faith in the unity of God. In Africa the tribes which wander along the northern border of the Soudan and the Algerian Sahara are mixed with others which are not of genuine Arab blood, though they speak the Arab tongue and call themselves Arabs. Like the genuine Arabs, they dearly love their horses, and on horseback they are indefatigable. Barelegged and barefooted, with their white burnous wrapped round them, its hood over their head, the Bedaween as he walks in unconscious dignity is a striking object. In Africa they are more religious than in their native land, and countless sects, under the protection of countless saints, extend their branches through the country. Some of these fraternities, like those of the Aissawi, practice still barbaric rites; others adopt or retain the ordinary forms of Mohammedan worship. The postures of the Mohammedan at prayer are striking and reverent. His face to the east, he stands or kneels on the ground, with his hands held up as though the palms were a book from which he is reading. At the name of God he prostrates himself in such a manner that seven parts of his body—head, hands, feet and knees—touch the earth together. These genuflections form a part of every act of prayer, which always begins with the first words of the Koran: "Praise be to God, the Lord of all creatures, the most merciful, the Lord of the day of judgment! Thee do we worship; Thy aid we implore. Guide us into the right way, the way of those to whom Thou showest mercy, not of those with whom Thou art angry, and who go astray."—Harper's Bazar.

Broken Down Young Women.

It will be universally conceded that too many of our women are not by any means robust. They marry, and in a few years they break down physically under the cares of motherhood and housekeeping. Young men are not slow to observe this, and their knowledge of the fact may be one of the predisposing causes of that reluctance to marry which is said to be a growing characteristic of American men. But why is it that numbers of our women fail in health so early, and become, not fancied invalids like the fine ladies of a generation gone by, but really incapacitated for the perfect performance of those duties which are distinctively and properly their own? The answer lies at hand. It is a faulty system of education that is responsible, if not for all, at least for very many of the ills from which they suffer. Leaving aside altogether as not pertinent to the subject under consideration the much vexed question of the relative capacity of the sexes, there remains the fact that our girls are expected to acquire the same information at school that is imparted to young men. But they are heavily handicapped. They are "finished," and enter society at an age when their brothers are just about entering on a college course. In other words they have from three to four fewer years for study, and necessarily are compelled to study much harder. This involves prolonged indoor confinement at a critical period of their existence, and an almost total neglect of calisthenics. The growing girl, just budding into perfect womanhood, needs light, air and exercise. What wonder, if she does not get them, that she emerges from her college or her convent school a weak, muscleless creature, with a mind stored at the expense of her body, and a painful consciousness that if she has learned much, one thing at least has been more indelibly impressed upon her than any other, and that thing the fact that her back is too weak to hold her body erect without the aid of corsets. Boys are more fortunate. They are not expected to acquire so much in so short a time, and they have far more leisure for exercise.

If it is necessary that women should acquire all that men do, for charity's sake let them have an equal time in which to do so. If, however, they are to leave school at seventeen or eighteen, a proper consideration for their future and for the welfare of the generation of which they will be the mothers should prompt such a curtailment of their studies as will leave them ample time for indulgence in healthgiving exercise.—Chicago Herald.

WIT AND WISDOM.

—Every man is occasionally what he ought to be perpetually.

—When he was eating fast and furiously, piling in the food as farmers do hay into the barn on the eve of a thunder shower in June, the head waiter stepped up and said: "Beg pardon, sir, but there's no train out to-night." "I know it," said the man with his mouthful, "and that's why I'm hurrying to catch a good night's sleep!"—Hotel Mail.

—An old story in a new form is going the grand rounds, and tells about a young man at table d'hote at one of the rural hotels, where "lady waiters" are employed. He wanted a beverage with his roast, and summoned the maiden, to whom he said: "Have you any porter?" "Yes," she said, "we have three or four, but they are all colored." Where ignorance is bliss it is the height of absurdity to be intelligent.

—A county rector called rather early in the morning on one of his parishioners. One of the children saw him coming, and ran into the house to tell his mother. The little fellow soon returned to the front and resumed his play. The clergyman inquired: "Is your mother at home?" "No, sir," replied the child: "she is out at present." "Tell her when she returns that I called," said the clergymen. "I did tell her," replied the little boy.—Chicago Tribune.

—The little fellow had just had the dust and grime of the day's play washed off him and dropped on his knees at the bedside. "Oh, God, make me a good boy to-night, amen." "Is that all?" asked his mother. "Don't you want to be a good boy to-morrow, too? You can't help being good when you're asleep, you know." "I wish I could," was the response, with the twinklingist twinkle in his eyes. Wasn't that a "clear boy?"—New Haven Register.

A Secret Enemy.

For nearly three years Cooper Browning, a young farmer near Ellisburg, N. J., has been the victim of a series of outrages, the perpetrator of which he has been unable to discover. It was on the night of December 18, 1879, that the work of persecution begun. A spacious well-filled barn was fired some time after midnight and burned to the ground. Twenty-five valuable cows—fifteen of them Alderneys and Guernseys—perished in the flames. Not quite a year afterward two Alderney cows grazing in a field near the house were observed by a farm-hand to be rolling on the ground in great agony. Ten minutes later both animals were dead. Before Mr. Browning could recover from his surprise at the sudden loss five more cows had died. No less than ten pounds of Paris green were found scattered broadcast over the pasture. In October, 1881, seven more cows and thirty-five hogs were poisoned to death with arsenic. Sympathising neighbors did everything in their power to help him, and he is prosperous again, and awaiting the next attack, which, according to the periods intervening between the others, will take place in September. In order to take time by the forelock, however, and, if possible, frighten his enemy before another outrage is committed, Mr. Browning yesterday made public the following promise of reward:

$500 REWARD WILL BE PAID FOR THE arrest and conviction of the party who poisoned my cattle October 15, 1881. M. C. BROWNING, Ellisburg, Camden County, N. J.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

A man who could never afford to take a newspaper, mortgaged his house to buy two more dogs.

Hon. Thos. Willliams has accepted the Democratic nomination for Congress in this district in a most patriotic letter

The bad man wishes newspaper reporters would not mind their own business when it is their business to show him up.

Congressman Bragg of Wisconsin is generally acknowledged to play the neatest game of poker seen in in Washington since the days of Henry Watterson.

The broad-guage garter is in fashion again. "Madam," said a gentleman to a lady who had accidentally dropped one while passing along the street, "you have dropped your dog collar."

The Birmingham Observer and Iron Age have been purchased by a joint stock company, and only one paper will hereafter be issued, the Daily Age. The Age is in able hands, and we hope to see it succeed.

An Arizona man stops people on the highway, and asks them to contribute to an orphan asylum, and there is something so forbidding in his appearance that all the travellers shell out without asking where the asylum is or how much it needs.

A newspaper that praises all officers, whether they do their duty or not, is a great curse to any country; and every person who subscribes for such a paper is unintentionally helping to throw dust in his own eyes and those of his fellow citizens.—Eutaw Mirror.

All of the Alabama delegation in the 47th Congress have been renominated for the 48th Gongress, except Wheeler in the 8th district, who gives way for Pryor. The convention of the 3d district met Tuesday, and Col. Oates had a walk over. It now seems that the Washington correspondent of the Augusta Chronicle was pretty well posted in Alabama politics, as he perdicted several months ago that Wheeler would not be re-nominated.—Tuskegee News.

The Montgomery Advertiser even is getting its suspicions aroused about the recent curious developments among the negroes in Choctaw, Shelby, Clark, Monroe and Wilcox counties. In an editorial entitled "Is there anything behind it?" says: "So far from the recent occurrence in Choctaw county being a Democratic political scheme for the preservation of power, it begins to appear more like some deep laid Republican plot to manufacture Northern campaign thunder." That is just about what the Shelby "priest" confessed to be his design, and we see nothing at all improbable in such a course by the Republican party. It is in desperation and will do anything plausible, no matter how foolish or ruinous it may be in its real inwardness and operation.—Selma Times.

Our Surplus Corn.

An interesting communication appears in the Montgomery Advertiser of the 10th, on this subject. The writer, who seems to be thoroughly posted, thinks it doubtful if the South will have any surplus corn, but says of our State: "The planters of Alabama will probably make more than enough to supply all their wants next season; and any surplus they may have will find ready sale in the mining and lumber districts of their own State, at prices above 50 cents per bushel."

Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Iowa are thought to be 200,000,000 bushels short of 1880, and the quantity of old corn in the country is believed to be 150,000,000 less. Missouri, Kansas, Kentucky and the cotton States will reduce this defficiency but not enough to bring prices down to those of 1880, viz: 40 and 42 cents in leading Western markets; and with Western corn at 70 and 80 cents laid down in Alabama, buyers will supply themselves with the home grown article on a basis of Western prices, with freight added.

Had the South produced all its corn, oats and potatoes as can easily be done, and in addition had grown one-half the wheat and hogs consumed, there would have been $147,500,000 of profit more than will be realized, a sum which, if distributed next January, would restore verdure to the waste places, prosperity to the homes, and hope to the breasts of a depressed people. The aggregate savings from the abundant grain crop of our own State will closely approximate $15,000,000, a sum which will go far towards relieving the agricultural classes of debt; and if they can only be induced to sow largely of oats in October, and to plant ten per cent. more corn next spring than was done last, to raise all the hogs possible, another average cotton crop will complete their deliverance.

We have given the chief points of the Advertiser's communication almost verbatim, and will close with its editorial comments upon the same. It says: "Our correspondent shows by reliable figures what it costs to make our cotton crop, and but little margin is left for profits after a 600,000 bale crop is disposed of here in Alabama, unless a plentiful supply of corn and oats are raised in the State. But the hope is also held out that the policy at present being inaugurated in the South, will, before many years, enable our farmers to relieve themselves of debt, and once more regain the high road to prosperity. Nearly every farmer is preparing to sow a large acreage of oats, and this, followed by a plentiful planting of corn next Spring, will bring peace, plenty and prosperity."

Hon. Thomas Williams.

We nail at our mast-head to-day the name of Hon. Thomas Williams, of Elmore, who has been renominated by the Democrats of the 5th District as the candidate for the 48th Congress. This is the third time Colonel Wiliams has been nominated for Congress in this district; and it is a compliment to his ability and fidelity. He has made a faithful and diligent member of Congress, and the people all over the State have begun to realize the fact that the longer a man remains in Congress the more influence he has, and the better service he is capable of rendering.

Colonel Williams has never been a candidate for public office. The first half of his well spent life was passed in the pursuit of his own private affairs, taking a lively interest in the future welfare and prosperity of his State, but preferring that others should fill the offices, and guide the ship of State, hence he was not an active politician.

In 1878 Colonel Williams was conscripted by the Democrats of Elmore county, and elected to the Legislature over the most bitter and determined opposition. In the same year, it will be remembered, he was nominated for Congress by Wetumpka convention, as a compromise between the two candidates before that body, and no one was more surprised at his selection than himself. He has ever since taken the high and commendable position that the office belonged to the people, and that by no word or act of his would he influence their action in the naming of a candidate, and we know that he has been consistent. We venture the assertion that no voter in the 5th Congressional district can truthfully say that he ever solicited their vote in convention, for the position he now holds—hence his nomination comes from the, spontaneous uprising of the people, in honor of one in every way worthy of their support, and fit and competent to discharge the duties of a Congressman; and is an expression of their confidence in him, and an endorsement of his public career.

In the discharge of his duties in Congress, the most humble of his constituents have not been neglected, and all letters and enquiries have received prompt attention. Those who have had business before the departments in Washington, were impressed with the eagerness and interest manifested by Colonel Williams in their behalf, and they are sure that their cause never suffered in his hands. Whatever untiring energy and indomitable perseverance could accomplish was forthcoming, and he never tired in serving his people; those in trouble were assisted with a lavish hand, and they have not forgotten his encouraging words and constant, unceasing efforts in their behalf; and thus it is how he has endeared himself to the district, and accounts for his overwhelming strength in the recent convention.

Pure and steadfast in his devotion to the principles of the Democratic party, mentally capable of, as he has proven, filling the office, fully identified with the material prosperity and advancement of Alabama, it is very certain that no better choice could have been made of one to represent us in the councils of the nation. With an active intellect, his thought flowing as clearly as the current of a crystal stream, of fine and commanding appearance, with a character unspotted, and a record which is free from corruption, with an upright, blameless life behind him, he will always be the peer of any Representative on the floor of Congress. Whole-souled, magnanimous, kind, generous and true, no one has, or deserves, warmer or more enthusiastic friends, or more devoted admirers. A bold and fearless speaker, eloquent, ready and aggressive in his campaigns, we pity the man who is foolish enough to face him in the contest. His election is already assured.

While Macon county would, of course, have preferred her own able and favorite citizen, who had been mentioned in connection with the nomination, our people are satisfied with the action of the convention, and in November next will roll up the usual majority for the gallaut and noble Williams.

We had occasion last week to visit Tuskaloosa, our old home. We were impressed with the progress and improvement which was visible on every hand. The State Insane Hospital and the University are both located in the suburbs of this beautiful old town. The first named institution is undergoing extensive improvements and will soon be in a condition to accommodate a much larger number of patients than are now with in its walls. It is the largest building in the State, and is known far and wide as one of best regulated institutions of the kind in the entire country. It now contains about 480 patients, but has rather the appearance of being a quiet, peaceful home than a mad-house. This is owing to the excellent management of the worthy superintendent, Dr. Bryce, who has made the Asylum the most interesting place to visit, both socially and professionally, within the limits of the State. The last legislature appropriated $100,000 for its improvement and extension, and the work is now going on. A like appropriation for the State University would not be amiss. All Alabama should feel a pride in this noble institution, and seek to see it prosper. The State owes the University something over a million dollars, which it will probably never be able to repay, and the claims of the institution should, therefore, be paramount.

Besides the University, Tuskaloosa has within her limits two splendidly equipped female colleges —the Ala. Central, under the control of Prof. A. K. Yancey, and the Tuskaloosa Female, presided over by Profs. Hill and Mellen. Both of these institutions rank deservedly high, and we venture to say are not surpassed by any similar institution in the South. These institutions, together with numerous high schools and academies, and a colored theological seminary, under the control of the Presbyterian denomination, have justly given to Tuskaloosa the title of "the Athens" of Alabama. Perhaps, she has another claim to this title, in the fact that she supports three newspapers, from which we conclude that her people, like the "Athenians" of old, are ever anxious to hear "some new thing."

We would like to dwell further upon the great improvements in the business portion of the town—the street railway, the numerous residences lately constructed, the cotton factory, and the substantial iron bridge which now arches above the romantic waters of the Warrior. Our limited space forbids this pleasure, but we must say something of the pretty girls for which the old town is famous. We could write a volume on the "faithfulness" of some of them, Tom Baine to the contrary, notwithstanding. In fact, we think it probable that we could dilate on this subject more than on any other. A blooming trio, consented, after assuring themselves that we were perfectly harmless, to accompany us on a ride to the Asylum. They seemed to be under the impression that we would remain, and they have the return ride all to themselves. There proved to be no room in the building for "dead heads," and so we were not debarred the pleasure of returning with them.

Bros. Nunnelee, Warren, and Guild & Burton, are making the newspaper business boom, and with a doff of our hat to them for many courtesies, we bade the old "Oak City" adieu, in hopes, however, that it would not be for long.

A communication to the Age, one day last week, it seems, did some injustice to a calf. The communication spoke of a remarkable calf eleven months old which was sucking itself as well as its mother. Mr. C. D. Shepherd the owner of the calf tells the Age that the remarkable thing about his calf was not that it sucked itself (which the correspondent of the Age was mistaken in stating), but that it was giving milk and was milked every morning.

LOCAL DOTTINGS.

Maj. Harrell is making handsome improvements to the Duke house, which he lately purchased.

The rain has been the cause of the production of armies of mosquitoes in some localities around us.

Mr. James M. Kelly, living twelve miles east of Clanton died last Tuesday, 5th inst., of dropsy. He was about 65 or 70 years of age.

Messrs. Maull & Hockensmith have removed their stock of goods to Lomax where they can be found ever ready to wait on their customers.

Dr. W. E. Stewart's name has been favorably mentioned in connection with the position of Assistant Clerk of the House of Representatives. He would make a most efficient officer.

Our first bale of new cotton was brought to Clanton on last Saturday by Mr. Anderson Baker. It was sold at 13 cents, J. H. Hannon & Co. being the purchasers. It weighed 502 pounds.

The American Universal Cyclopedia is one of the best works of the kind ever published. It is a verbatim reprint of Chambers Cyclopedia and is cheaper than any other Cyclopedia published.

Banks may bust and go up, but we defy them to get any of our money to soar with. We deposit our spare change with delinquent subscribers, and none of them will ever go up.—Ex.

Conventions seem to be the order of the day. The colored barbers of this State held a convention in Montgomery last week. They decided to support each other, have one regular price, and not to "mix color" in their shop work.

One of Chilton's dusky would-be statesmen is now in durance vile at Centreville, Bibb Co. His name is Dave Hightower, and he is an ex-candidate for Representative from this county. He assaulted a negro woman in Bibb county lately, and when the deputy Sheriff attempted to arrest him, he assaulted that officer with an axe, striking him on the head and shoulder with the sharp edge, and cutting said officer's hat and coat, but strange to say did no other damage. He was finally arrested and lodged in the Centreville jail to await trial. He is of pure African origin.

The Camp Meeting.

Our camp meeting which was opened on last Wednesday, was closed last night. Owing to the extremely inclement weather, the attendance on Saturday and Sunday was not so large as it other wise would have been. Much good work we hope has been accomplished. Among the visiting ministers we noticed Revs. H. R. McCoy, T. J. Rutledge, publisher of the Ala. Christain Advocate, Revs. Lewis, Roper and Carmichael. The meeting were largely attended during the last three days, and many sought the mourner's bench, and there were a number of accessions to the church.

The Fever in Pensacola.

There were twenty new cases of yellow fever at Pensacola on Monday and three deaths. The fever has been declared epidemic and relief is being called for by the stricken city.

LATER.—Twenty-two new cases were reported on the 12th, and gloom seems to pervade every quarter of the city. Montgomery quarantines all mail matter from Pensacola except first class.

Moonlight Picnic.

We are in receipt of a neatly printed invitation to attend a moonlight picnic to be given at Blasingame's Mill, on to-morrow (Friday) night. The committee of arrangements contains the names of C. R. Hannon, Will Callen, Ben Harrell and C. L. Philips, and their names are a sufficient guarantee that the occasion will be a pleasant one.

ED. CHILTON VIEW

In the last issue of your paper, you published an article under the head of Mans Humanity to Man in which you called the attention of the commissioners to the fact that Dr Robenson had practesed gratuetously on Mr Well you sugest that the court should pay him for his services as Mr. Well is to Poor to pay himself Now this is a very timely suggestion, but as their a great many physicians in chilton county all of which book a great deal more than they ever collect by Reasons of the Povity of their Patients would it not be more convenient to hold a Doctors convention once every year, and Let Each Doctor make a return on oath of the amount of charity practice he has don during the Past year so the county commissioners could at their next meeting proceed to pay all such claims as in their judgement were Bona fide and thus instead of numerous Petitions during the year all such claims could be passed on and paid at one time; Merchants also in many instance moved by Mans Humanity to Man let poor People have groceries with very faint hopes of ever Being Paid and as the county is as much bound to feed and clothe her poore as to Doctor them why not then let the merchants; also hold an annual convention on the same plan as the Doctors; it is true that these suggestions, if carried out would bankrupt the county and pauperise its citizens but that would be a matter of small importance compared to Manes Humanity to Man

AFTER THE CYCLONE.

Is this the spot? they tell me so,
Where my home stood a week ago,
One little week ago, ah me!
My weary gaze can only see
An orchard of uprooted trees,
A garden swept away, and these Great heaps of logs and clay that press
The earth with their unsightliness.
They made the cottage low, where we,
Myself and John and baby, three,
At least, of all earth's children were
Most glad of life, most free from care.

The morning, oh, it was so bright!
And clover blossoms red and white
Made the air heavy with perfume,
And early roses were in bloom;
The climbing peas in bud, and beets
In red-lined leaves telling their sweets,
The beans grew fast, the cabbage, too,
Its sea-green leaves empearled with dew,
Stood sturdily; and from my door
I saw it all and wondered more
And more—my baby on my knee—
Why God had been so good to me.

When John came whistling from the field—
John was my life, my sun, my shield—
And as he came, my heart, so blest
With olden memories tenderest,
Seemed overburdened just to see
Him come, and see the baby's glee.
He talked with me a little while,
Drank from the well, then with a smile
Lifted the baby up, and said:
"Good-bye;" and laid upon my head
His hand with tender touch, and then
Said: "We will not come back again,
My work is done, and now, you see,
The baby goes along with me."

I laughed aloud, with scarcely less
Than my own baby's carelessness.
Under the trees, and through the gate
Went man and child with joy elate;
The father with such fond, fond pride
To give the little one a ride
On horseback there. I looked that way
And waved my hands as glad as they;
And this, and this; who tells me so,
That it was but a week ago.

Then I was young, now I am old,
As though my threescore years were told;
My memory tries in vain to go
Through what befel, but this I know:
An awful sound from everywhere
And sudden horror filled the air.
Swaying and sweeping overhead
A spectral cloud of dark and dread
Came through the sky, and Heaven fell
And earth sank down, and up rose Hell,
And I was lost, and called on John
To bring our child, but died alone.

I died, for it was death to me,
And that one hour eternity.
And now, God pity me, I stand
Upon this desolated land;
Home, garden, flower and tree are gone,
I have no hope, no child, no John.
The neighbors tell me God knows best,
To comfort me; they are at rest,
They say, and buried tenderly
When I was all too ill to see.
It must be so, it must be so,
But was it but a week ago?

Would I could know how long it seems
To John and baby in their dreams,
For well I know they dream of me,
Who loved them, oh, so utterly!
Ah! they have much to tell, how they
Cried out for me in death that day.
John standing on the Happy Shore
Without my welcome at the door,
He cannot be at home, and he
Will grieve because he said to me
They would not come again, then make
More of the baby for my sake.

Oh, there be secrets dread and deep
The dead must know, the dead must keep;
And there be sorrows all too dread
To tell the living; but the dead
We long to tell; they heed us not.
Oh, John and baby, unforgot!
I stand an effigy of woe
Where our home stood a week ago.

Two Women at Front Doors.

Across the street from our house is a new double brick block, with front door-steps exactly alike. Two families, strangers to each other, lately moved into these twin houses, and there began a rivalry between the "better half" of each family as to which of the two door-steps should be most tastily decorated. The landing on the left was first ornamented with a gorgeous, many-colored rug. The lady on the right flung defiance with a bright-hued carpet that covered the steps and reached to the sidewalk. The rug at the left looked lonesome, and was reinforced by a low bamboo rocker strung with many-colored ribbons. The lady at the right came to the door, saw the ribbon rocker, and resolved to go it two better with a couple of camp-stools, beautiful to look upon, but unsatisfactory for sitting purposes, if the sitter weighs more than a fairy.

For a brief moment the lady at the left was staggered, but on recovering her self-possession she rushed in and dragged out one of those treacherous hard-to-get-into and easy-to-get-out-of arrangements called a hammock. While she was tacking this up on the porch, in such a way as would break the first man's back who tried to ride it, her rival hovered around the scene, a picture of apathetic despair. The poor little guitar, minus one string, with which she had vainly endeavored to stem the tide which was setting against her, was plainly inadequate. At this juncture fate came to her aid. The discordant cry of a potted flower vender sounded like the rarest melody to her ear. After an agony of waiting he came within hailing distance, and she bought him out, leaving no living thing for her left hand neighbor to fasten upon.

The smile of triumph that curled around the corners of her mouth after this maneuver was a study for a painter. But it faded as quickly as it came. The left hand lady matched the floral display with an improvised aviary, consisting of a yellow canary and a green parrot, which she had previously overlooked, and then she sat down in the midst of her surroundings with a complacent air as of assured victory, to await the coming of her housemaid, who had been sent to a florist's for a gorgeous hanging basket, which was intended to drive the iron of defeat straight into her rival's soul. The right hand woman was not idle. As a last resource she produced her parlor aquarium, containing a gold-fish and a striped water-lizard (the latter dead.) Then she appeared, and after a short delay came back carrying the family clothes-basket.

It was draped with the crimson-figured table-cover from the parlor, and contained the family cat and her large litter of newly-born kittens. Two staid citizens might at this time have been seen making their way, arm in arm, toward this new block, and deep in conversation. They stopped before the astounding display and gazed in wonder. "Are you to move so soon?" "No; but I should judge that you were fixing for an auction sale!" were the remarks exchanged. They were the husbands of the respective ladies. To hide their emotion, the men sought the nearest saloon. And while the ladies went inside their empty houses to have a "good cry," a colored man walked off with the canary, cage and all, while some naughty boys sequestered every one of the old cat's kittens.—*N. RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Twenty-seven missionaries for China and Japan left San Francisco recently in one steamer.

—The Baptists of New England are said to be gaining more rapidly than any other denomination.

—The gifts of the late Edwin B. Morgan to Wells College, at Aurora, N. Y., foot up about $364,000.

—The London Saturday Review classes Michigan University as a woman's college, because Ann Arbor is a feminine name!

—The School Directors of Monongahela City, Pa., require every lady teacher employed to sign a contract not to marry during the school year.

—The Irish Presbyterian Synod has adopted resolutions strongly condemning the growing practice of sitting instead of standing during prayers.

—A Union Church has been started at Newfield, Conn., comprised of thirty members—Adventists, Methodists, Baptists and Congregationalists.—Christian Union.

—Colonel Shorter, the Rome, Ga., millionaire, left in his will a bequest of $35,000 and one hundred shares of railroad stock to the college that bears his name, as a permanent endowment, the income therefrom to be used for the employment of teachers and the assistance of needy teachers.—Chicago Times.

—At the commencement of Mount Union College, Ohio, a few days since, it was stated that during the year the attendance had been 515, with a greater average attendance than formerly, and that the total number of students from the origin of the college had been 16,526, about one-fourth of them ladies, and over one-half teachers.

—The revision of Luther's Bible, begun in 1863, has just been finished. Of the thirty original members of the revision committee but fourteen live to see the revision completed. The work is now to be printed and submitted to the university faculties for criticism. It will probably be ready for the public in about two years.—N. Y. Independent.

—An English newspaper writer says: "Sermons, when for a charity, might be reduced in length were everybody to follow the example of a friend of mine. When 'sitting under' one of these sermons, he places twenty shillings in his pocket. After the sermon has lasted twenty minutes, he deducts a shilling for each extra five minutes, and only puts in the plate what remains."—N. Y. Post.

—It is gradually becoming impressed upon the public that to learn a few simple things intelligently and with the freshness of interest and liking is better for a child than to commit to memory in a perfunctory fashion a host of things which inspire it with nothing but weariness and a desire to get through quickly and be done with it. Exact teaching suffused with honest enthusiasm is the boon which the future will bring. The growth of public opinion in this direction has within the last two or three years been astonishing.—Chicago Journal.

—Bishop Loughlin, of Brooklyn, has suspended the Rev. J. Dougherty, of the Church of the Guardian Angel, at Brighton Beach, because he had accepted money that came from an "improper source." Father Dougherty accepted the offer made by Mr. Engeman of one day's proceeds of the race course. The day was set and the amount realized $2,000, which has been returned to Mr. Engeman. The action of the Bishop has been approved by most of the clergy, but some of them think the rule should be extended so as to prohibit lotteries at church fairs.—Christian Union.

A. T. Stewart's Charity Failure.

Mr. Stewart was a very gifted shopkeeper, whose rare talent in a single line gave him both fame and wealth. But he knew as little of charity as he cared for it; and when he came, at the close of his life, to attempt something in that direction, he blundered with a facility and self-confidence which ought to be enduringly instructive. It had been urged upon him that he owed something to the working girls who had done so much to build up his fortune; and so, tardily and ignorantly, he set about a scheme in their behalf. He built a huge structure, capable of housing a thousand people. Every feature of this structure, in view of the purpose for which it was designed, was a glaring incongruity—and then, when he had completed it, he condescended to ask the counsel of experts as to carrying his scheme into execution. He was informed by those whose counsel he ought long before to have sought that the very character of his building prohibited it from being useful. He was shown that to assemble one thousand young women under one roof in a working-woman's house, was to necessitate one of two things: either a police so vigilant and so intrusive as to be to any decent girl intolerable; or else, a laxity so provocative of evil as almost to guarantee it. He was shown that he ought to have built a series of small houses, each with a matron or housekeeper of its own, and each to contain a dozen girls, at most, where the surveillance could have been constant without being obtrusive, and where something like domesticity would have made a home in name a home in fact. But Mr. Stewart believed supremely in Mr. Stewart. Successful men generally believe in themselves. He showed this in his architecture, which was hideous, where it might as easily have been graceful and pleasing. He showed it in his charitable plans, to which he gave but little thought, and in which he chose to be sufficient to himself. And so his great wealth has resulted in no service to his fellow-townspeople and in scanty honor to his memory. It is a story which may profitably be read by other rich men.—Century Magazine.

—There are but few places in the United States where water is more valuable than petroleum. Garfield, the new Pennsylvania oil town, is perhaps the only such locality. There is no water, and the supply for human existence has to be brought from a spring some distance from town. It costs sixty cents a barrel, while oil is only worth fifty-six, and the water venders will not give a barrel of water for a barrel of oil.

Louisiana Moss.

As the best qualities and the largest quantities are found in cypress swamps, and generally on the tallest trees, unless the moss clinging to these be detached and thrown to the ground by wind storms, the usual and easiest method is to fell the trees, when all the moss can with facility and rapidity be removed. When first gathered from the tree, it is of light grayish or lead color, and in that condition not marketable—therefore not shipped. Before this can be done, it is made to undergo a rotting or curing process, by which what is known and termed the bark of the moss fiber is removed. This process requires from thirty to forty days and is effected by depositing the green moss in wet ditches or trenches, where a flow of water over and through the moss is secured. Subsequently, when the bark has been removed and the moss has assumed a black, glossy color, it is exposed to the sun, thoroughly dried, then baled and shipped to New Orleans, where other treatment awaits it.

It must be understood that there are grades and classifications in moss, as in other articles of commerce, and that they are adopted and recognized as standards of type in the market and by the trade. These classifications are four in number, ranging from No. 1 to No. 4, the latter being the highest type. When moss reaches New Orleans, it is sent to the factory, where it is unbaled and picked, so as to separate the various types which may be in one bale, and after culling and immersion in baths, where it is thoroughly cleansed, it is exposed to air and sun to be dried. After passing through the picking, washing and drying process, it is then passed through the moss gin, each quality or type separately, and thus baled, when it is ready for shipment. At this stage the classifications are again changed. The former, No. 1 to No. 4, applying to moss as it reaches the city, while after undergoing the several processes at the factory it becomes known as wash No. 1 to No. 3, the No. 4 being technically known as vegetable hair, the highest grade of which sells at the rate of 12½ cents per pound.

There are at present in New Orleans three of these factories or moss cleaning establishments, each handling and manipulating daily fifty to sixty bales of the article, and a total during the year of thirty to forty thousand bales. They employ together about one hundred laborers, male and female, paying weekly wages ranging from five to ten dollars. There is no reason whatever why the receipts at New Orleans should not be one hundred thousand bales. With that increase there would be no glut, as the demand will keep step with the increase and development of the industries which utilize and absorb it. The swamps and forests of Louisiana can furnish any supply for generations to come. One parish alone, that of Lafourche, is capable of an annual yield of twenty thousand bales if the proper energy and labor be applied.

It is estimated that an active and able-bodied man, in a chosen locality, can gather daily of green moss what will make when cured and dried one hundred pounds, worth at current prices from three to four dollars, according to type; which, after deductions for bailing, freight, etc., will yield, a return of two and one-half to three dollars for each day's work. With these inducements, and the additional one that little or no capital is needed, there is no reason why during the idle months preceding the cotton-picking season all hands, particularly in parishes which suffered most and longest from the overflow, should not turn out in force and set themselves to moss gathering. The swamps are full of the material, and the overflow has contributed to cure (and that is the best of curing) all the moss which was on the ground. All that is to be done is to gather and dry it. What can thus be collected and sent to market will contribute somewhat to make good the losses sustained from inundation, and will go far toward paying for the cotton bagging and other fall necessities of the farm and plantation.—N. O. Picayune.

The Approach to Rotterdam by Canal.

It is nearly midday before we go through the sluice-gates and drop down toward Rotterdam. We pass many canals, which stretch away from us into the country. There are many of them so narrow that only small crafts can ply upon them. The windmills multiply and then suddenly cease, for we are now in a region where they are unavailing; the land lies much below the level of the sea, and is irreclaimable. Most desolate, even in the bright midday sun, is the appearance of the shores. We are no longer in a canal, but in a wide sweep of dark, turbid water, fringed by a wilderness of sedges and osiers. Flocks of teal and brent rise with harsh discordant cry; while water-hens bob in and among the twisted roots of the willows. In the background rises the bare, straight high-road against the horizon. Here and there a tiny cottage stands on its platform of brick; at the foot of a flight of steps a boat lies moored, the only means of exit and egress being by water. The occupation of these lonely dwellers of the marsh is osier-cutting. The osiers are split and made into hoops, an expensive traffic being carried on between Holland and other countries in this commodity.

Soon we begin to pass numerous vessels; the water widens, and a forest of masts rises in the distance, and there is Rotterdam. Very quaint and picturesque looks the ancient city, with its curious gabled houses, over whose roofs the spires of more than one old church appear. The broad quay is planted with magnificent lime-trees, which also rear their leafy branches over the sidewalks of the many canals, which intersect the town like net-work, where busy craft pass up and down. But when the noise and bustle of the day are stilled, and I sit on deck and watch the great round moon lift her yellow face above the tall ships' masts, and softly throw her magic mantle over the scene, I think that Holland, with its ever-present waters, is a land of beauty and wonder.—Chambers' Journal.

The Albany (N. Y.) Argus observes: Judge McGowan, this city, was cured of rheumatism by St. Jacobs Oil.

—San Francisco is enjoying a pleasant series of little earthquakes, which, now that the fashionables are away for the summer, add some zest and excitement to the otherwise quiet life of those that remain. We are prepared to hear anything almost in the line of big stories about California fruit, flowers, fish, snakes and trees, but it staggers one to read of an earthquake of such intelligence that it actually picks out certain individuals to intimidate, for the New York "Herald," in giving an account of the affair, says "the earthquake shook the widows of Oakland"!—Christian Union.

The Salem (Mass.) Register mentions: Mr. J. S. LeFavour, artist, surprisingly benefited by St. Jacobs Oil. Rheumatism twenty years.

—The annual interest on the public debt is now about $1.08 for every inhabitant. In 1876 it was more than twice this, being $2.20 per capita, and in 1865 it was as high as $4.29 per capita, or $150,977,697, to be paid by 35,469,000 people.—N. Y. Times.

Extravagance

There is some help for all the defects of fortune; for if a man cannot attain to the length of his wishes, he may have his remedy by cutting them short.

Iron and Calisaya Bark have long been esteemed by the medical profession as among the most reliable of tonics, and when the celebrated Dr. Harter conceived the idea of combining them with phosphates, he formed a tonic that has proved beyond any question to be superior to any offered to the public, and one that no intelligent physician would refuse to sanction or to recommend; in fact, two-thirds of the Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic sold in the North, East and West, is through physicians' prescriptions, and is not classed in the same category with patent or proprietary medicines. There can be no doubt that in cases of dyspepsia in its worst form, general debility, all female diseases, want of vitality, etc., it is a speedy and positive cure and brings relief where all other remedies fail.—Ask your druggist for it.

—A New Yorker has been fined $300 for giving tobacco to a giraffe.

For dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility, in their various forms; also as a preventative against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the "Ferro-Phosphorated Elixir of Calisaya," made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all Druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness, it has no equal.

GENTLEMEN: I have used Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has, in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. LINES TO A GUINEA HEN

[illegible] hear thy squawk at morning time, sweet bird;
When rosy-tinted clouds float in the skies,
Through dewy distances thy song is heard;
Above the robin's note thy carols rise,
[illegible] and bashful; no, but glad and strong
Squawks to the clouds thy clear, exultant song.

[illegible] catch thy warbled note, sweet hen;
Would thy soft numbers might inspire my rhyme;
Could I but make your cackle with my pen,
[illegible] down the ringing corridors of time
[illegible] send the vesper hymn, dear speckle-back—
K'ka, k'n ka, ka, ka, k'n ka, ka, kwack!

Thy feet are swifter than the sands of time;
When down the lane I hear thy distant squeak
[illegible] through the fence get up and climb,
And cross the meadow, one quick, speckled streak;
[illegible] built to catch thee on the fly,
And ostriches, that see thee run, go home to die.

[illegible] thy papier mache head, shy Guinea hen,
Where flame the scarlet poppies in the sun;
[illegible] thy nest, far from the haunts of men,
[illegible] four thousand miles thou hast to run,
[illegible] the bending grass, close by the old rail fence,
[illegible] your eggs in eggstacy intense.

[illegible] with the [illegible] bars,
[illegible] you bashful thing,
[illegible] to roost hen with the stars,
[illegible] with tireless squawk your vigils keep,
[illegible] to sing your answering mates to sleep.

[illegible] the lesson of thy life so sweet—
[illegible] my horn, though I may sell no [illegible]
[illegible] my carol loud, my footsteps fleet,
That [illegible] may hear, but not come where I [illegible]

RAGSDALE AND THE LEPROSY.

A correspondent writes from Honolulu: Bill Ragsdale, one of the most [illegible] political characters the Sandwich Islands ever produced, was for [illegible] years the Parliament interpreter. Ragsdale at that time wielded more influence than any dozen Nobles or Assemblymen. He was a half white, very [illegible] educated, a close English student, brilliant, witty talker, immoral, fearless, jolly and sharp. He bullied the native members and misinterpreted the foreign members, for or against any [illegible] he was at all interested in; and [illegible] was well known that a cash consideration would interest him, he generally killed or carried a measure as he [illegible] best to do. When the session [illegible] dull and some grizzled old native member had made a droning, [illegible] speech in favor of a new bridge [illegible] Kohala District, and set every [illegible] asleep, Ragsdale would rise [illegible] and interpret thus: "Nobles [illegible]: The learned, grave [illegible] member from Kawaihae [illegible]—" Then Ragsdale would soar [illegible] in poetic flights of flowery English, vying with the English poets; [illegible] to an [illegible] tirade [illegible] tell a witty [illegible] and having waked [illegible] the foreign members, [illegible] "The paternal [illegible] from Kawaihae, who put you [illegible] with his bad native speech, [illegible] a new plank ain't put in the Kohala bridge, the first thing you [illegible] man) will break [illegible] leg on it, or her horse's leg, which would be worse, and so if you [illegible] your [illegible], gentlemen, you had better proceed to a vote."

If some [illegible] foreign member made [illegible] of a measure [illegible] he would "interpret" [illegible] and [illegible] speech in [illegible] own [illegible], probably [illegible] the foreign member. His worst trick, [illegible] it, was to burlesque [illegible] against any [illegible] he was interested in. He would [illegible] the foreigner's mannerisms, and [illegible] his sober English into funny [illegible] in the gravest possible manner, [illegible] do more harm than good with a [illegible] support the measure [illegible]. Of course this did [illegible] go unresented, and he was [illegible] discharged, but only to be [illegible] as his services, though [illegible], were indispensable. Once Bill Ragsdale was arrested by [illegible] named Dowsett, who married [illegible] sister. The arrest was on [illegible] the sudden disappearance from Dowsett's ranch of certain heads of [illegible] stock [illegible] in connection therewith Ragsdale got one year in prison. [illegible] confinement pleasantly for [illegible] months, [illegible] election time, [illegible] his own influence [illegible]. His brother-in-law Dowsett had been in the Parliament a number of terms, and was [illegible]. Upon securing his [illegible] Ragsdale went into Dowsett's district and did a little quiet work among the natives, who all swore by him, and who [illegible] resented Dowsett's unbrotherly treatment. The result of the election in that district was that Dowsett, who had several times been elected by an immense majority, was defeated, and Bill Ragsdale was elected by the largest majority the district ever gave. Meeting the defeated and chagrined candidate a few days later, Bill said: "That's even, dear brother-in-law. You retired me into prison and I've retired you from politics. Aloha."

Ragsdale always dressed in an ultra dandified style, and when finally he began wearing one light glove, even while performing his duties as interpreter, it was thought to be only one of his eccentricities. He told the sad truth soon afterward. He was a leper. The horrible disease, the scourge of fair Hawaii, had already made its mark on the constantly gloved hand, into which a knife could be plunged without inflicting the slightest pain. Poor Ragsdale gave himself up to the authorities, and asked to be sent at once to the leper settlement of Molokai. His example in surrendering himself probably induced scores of lepers, hiding from the authorities on all the islands, to do likewise. He went to Molokai and lived the ruler of that ghastly community until about three years ago.

Four years ago a friend of mine visited him there. He was living in a comfortable cottage, attended by all the servants he wanted, ruling the 700 poor wretches around him in a just, honorable manner. Pointing to a room in which no member of the settlement ever entered, Ragsdale said to his visitors: "You will find wine there, gentlemen. It was brought here by friends and no lepers' hands have defiled it. Go in and refresh yourselves. You cannot be waited on, as my servants are all lepers." He inquired after friends in Honolulu, to whom he sent messages and aloha. When my friend left he inquired of Ragsdale if there was anything he could do for him. "Yes, keep me supplied with reading matter. That is all I ask for or wish in this life now—something to read and think about; something to shut out from my mind this life. It is only a short time more with me now."

It was only a short time more, for soon news came that poor Bill Ragsdale, a volunteer exile in a leper settlement, had shut out from his mind forever this life.

I went with Dr. Fitch to the branch settlement for lepers. It is an inclosure of several acres on what is called Fishermen's Point, on Honolulu Bay. Scattered over the grounds are scores of cottages, some connected, others detached, and the offices and buildings used by Dr. Fitch's assistants. Imagine, if you can, a settlement of Anglo-Saxons, or people of any other highly civilized race, all of them afflicted with, and all more or less deformed, by an incurable and horrible disease—knowing it to be incurable, and seeing themselves and each other dropping to pieces from its dreaded effects. I cannot imagine such a picture, because I honestly believe that suicide would make a settlement impossible among any other than a people still barbarians, or else in the childhood of civilization. Such was the settlement I visited. There were men, women and children living in a world apart from ours, having nothing worth living for save mere existence, a succession of days, marked only by slow consummation of the death that had already seized upon their bodies, and had already deprive them of portions, which were already returned to dust.

There were in that strange and unnatural community marriages, births, deaths. I would not attempt to describe in detail the unrelieved ghastliness of the sights there, yet not one of the inmates who helped to make up the absolute dreadfulness of the scene failed to greet us with a smile and cordial aloha.

That only served to emphasize the darkness of the picture. I said not one; yet there was one. On a bed in a little cottage room, whose open door faced the dark, cool canyons back of the city, and whose window looked out upon the lovely bay and let in the lazy murmur of waves breaking over the coral reefs, lay a native woman, dying. Nearly all her right hand had dropped off, but in the remnants of her fingers she held a feather fan, which she faintly waved across her distorted face, to cool the hot, aching eyes that had not been closed for months, the palsied muscles of her eyelids refusing their duty.

As the doctor spoke pleasantly to her, she turned her glaring eyes toward us, but did not speak. "Her mouth is affected, too," the doctor said. We stood aside from her door to admit a cooling breath of air that just then came down from the mountains. The swollen face rested, and the feebly moving hand fell, in gratitude for the mountain breeze, yet, when it died away, the hand did not move again; it was her last moment. The mountain's gentle breath had comforted her, and when it died away her breathing ceased, too.

In one cottage we saw a little girl whose fingers had been drawn up until her hand was half closed. She had experimented with a novel cure by calmly stepping on the bent fingers until she had straightened them out. She exhibited the result with pride; four fingers straight and stiff, and as useful as so many wooden pegs would have been.

Out on what is called the play ground were some boys playing ball, one with a useless hand, another with a palsied leg, another with a foot partly gone, and others with swollen, senseless faces. On the veranda of a cottage sat two old natives, both with useless legs, but neither of whom showed any trace of leprosy in face or hands. As I watched them one of them began chanting a hulu hulu, accompaning it with appropriate movements of his hands. Possibly, observing the look of astonishment on my face, the old man's companion, with a meaning wink at me, joined in the chant, and soon both the old lepers were chanting and waving their hands in the sensuous measures of the hulu hulu. It was a dance of death, indeed; Punchinello's mask over a molding skull; a rollicking revelry in a charnal house; life mocking a gaping tomb.

The medical profession here in Honolulu is in a territic dispute about what leprosy is (!) and whether or not it is contagious. This, of course, is an old, old dispute, but it has been revived with great violence by the assertion of Dr. Fitch that it is, if not curable, amenable in a large degree to treatment, and that it is not contagious from ordinary contact, such as would demand the transportation of lepers into isolation. Dr. Fitch has been here two years, and naturally his youthful but dogmatical contradiction of the theories of the old and experienced practitioners has raised a discussion of a rather warm nature. However, his practice appeals to the sympathies of the natives, and he has a large, if rather ignorant, following.—San Francisco Call.

The Sort of a Reptile the Army Worm Is.

As a description of the appearance and habits of this worm, as well as the methods of destroying it, will undoubtedly be interesting to many readers, we make a few extracts from a letter written by a correspondent in Tennessee for the Cultivator and Country Gentleman. He begins the letter by saying that the prospect for good corn and wheat crops is very fine, but that farmers are not content, saying:

"The army-worm has come, and we will be ruined. The army-worm originates in old meadow lands more particularly, and where there are no meadows in a neighborhood I hear of no worms. They travel from the meadows to the wheat, oats, rye, barley and corn. If the wheat, rye and barley are past the bloom, and making the grain when attacked by the worm, the grain is oftener benefited by being stripped of the blades than injured. Oats, it attacked, are generally ruined—so is the corn; both being very tender plants, the worms go for them heavily. I will describe the worm for the benefit of those who are unacquainted with him: He is bald-headed, well-formed, black body, with two rather yellow than white stripes from head to tail. When full grown it is a fourth less in size than a common pencil, and when ready to deposit his cotton is rather yellow, and is very clumsy or slow, but in almost constant motion and very hungry, eating rapidly until he disappears. Where he goes I do not know; he simply goes out of sight. I find no holes that he goes into, and I do not find him dead on the ground. Where does he go to? I walked the ditch two hours this evening and the foregoing is the best description I can give you.

"He is, I might say, rather an innocent-looking worm, and has not the hideous look of the cut and measuring worms. The workmen upon my farm have been giving him battle for four or five days. First between my wheat field and meadows, and corn field and meadows, we ditched, throwing the earth out on the meadow side, and making the side next to the wheat or corn slanting under, so that when the worms come into the ditch, which they do by the thousands and millions, they attempt to crawl out on the corn and wheat side, and fall back, and when collected in the ditch we hitch a mule or horse to a small log of wood and draw it up and down the ditch and mash the army to death. With a little care they never pass the ditch. As I before stated, they never originate in the wheat or corn field, unless the wheat has been sown on an old meadow. But if they do get into the wheat, then there is only one mode of fighting them, and that is by the old Virginia mode. The worms crawl up the stalk and strip the blades off up to the head, if you will stand idly by and permit them to do so. To prevent this is almost too cheap and simple to relate. The worm is very clumsy, and the least shock precipitates him to the ground, and while there he does little or no damage.

"Take a rope from fifty to 100 feet in length and weight in the middle, and put a man or boy at each end of it and let them pass the rope over the field once a day so long as the worm lives, which is usually ten days, and you will save the field from injury. The fat fellows are never to make a second trip up the stalk; one trip with the rope is sufficient with that crop. A repetition of this operation once a day for ten days will save the crop; and it is easier and cheaper than ditching. I have succeeded in keeping them so far out of my wheat; so I have no occasion to use the rope practice, but others are using it every day, including Sunday, and report success."

Young Criminals.

—The criminal news of a single week recently makes a sad showing of boyish depravity. An Illinois boy killed the girl who rejected his addresses on account of his dissipation. Two Arkansas boys quarrelled over a rabbit hunt, and one slew the other with an ax. A St. Louis boy stabbed the playmate who teased him for his ignorance of English. A West Virginia boy shot the rival in a girl's affections. A Virginia boy confesses the poisoning of two persons. A Texas boy shot a little girl because she refused to put down a pail when he ordered her to. A Kansas boy was on trial for intentionally drowning a playfellow. Two Wisconsin boys maltreated a child nearly to death. Three boys pleaded guilty to highway robbery in Chicago. An Iowa boy is a forger. A Missouri boy set fire to a house. A New Mexico boy shot a baby. A Colorado horse thief is aged eight years, and none of the criminals mentioned are over sixteen.—Chicago Herald.

—The extermination of snakes has been vouchsafed. Pennsylvania farmers' boys have discovered that snake skins make good whiplashes, and two seaside belles are the envy of their girl friends because of their gaudy girdles of rattlesnakes' hides. Further investigation will doubtless demonstrate that hoop snakes make good hoops, glass snakes good spectacles, and garter snakes good suspenders.—N. Y. Times.

The Bursting of the Monsoon.

The brief message which reached us a day or two ago from Bombay—"the monsoon has burst"—has a meaning in it which only those who have lived in India can fully understand. On the regular "bursting" of the monsoon the very existence of the people of India may be said to depend. But for the monsoon the whole country would perish under its glaring sun; and during the early days of June Anglo-Indians look anxiously for the brief announcement of its coming. The southwest monsoon sets in generally toward the end of April, the steady wind sweeping up from the Indian Ocean and carrying with its dense volumes of vapor, which slowly collect in dark masses of cloud as they approach the continent. From Adam's Peak in the Isle of Spices, right along the Eastern and Western Ghants and the Nilgiris, every hill-top is gradually shrouded in mist, instead of standing out clear and sharp against the sky. Darker and denser become the cloud masses; the horizon assumes a heavy leaden appearance, sometimes kindling into a lurid glare—answering to the sense of oppression, both mental and physical, which accompanies it. The atmosphere becomes "close" and oppressive alike to man and beast; but the heat is borne with patience, for relief is at hand. Flashes of lightning play from cloud to cloud, and heavy thunder reverberates through the heavens; the wind suddenly springs up into a tempest, and along the shore the white waves are tossed in foam against the rocks or over the burning sand. Then a few great heavy drops of rain fall, like balls of lead from the apparently leaden sky; the forked lightning is changed to sheets of light, and suddenly the flood-gates of heaven are opened, and not rain, but sheets of water, are poured forth, refreshing the parched earth, carrying fertility over the surface of the country, filling the wells and natural reservoirs with a fresh store, and replenishing the dwindling rivers and streams. The whole earth seems suddenly recalled to life. Vegetation may almost be seen to grow, and from the baked mud of the river-banks emerge countless fishes, which for weeks or months before have lain there in torpor. The phenomena of the bursting of the monsoon are repeated from hill-top to hill-top, till the whole country, from Cape Comorin to Bombay and the great plains beyond, is summarily visited. Then follows a period of comparative repose, during which the welcome rains continue to fall, with but short intervals, for three or four months, invigorating and refreshing all things.—St. James' Gazette.

Insects Going West.

The tide of travel with insects, as with men, seems naturally to be from east to west. With the noted exception of the grape phylloxera and the Colorado potato beetle (as Miss Murthly points out in a paper to the St. Louis Academy), Europe has not received from America any considerable pest, while innumerable noxious species have crossed the Atlantic from Europe. There is a comparative scarcity, too, of Asiatic insect species on the western seaboard of America, notwithstanding the frequent ocean traffic. Spite of great arid plains and lofty mountains, nearly all the insects of Eastern American States, including those from Europe, have found their way to the fields, orchards, and vineyards of the Pacific States. One of the latest insect invaders from Europe is the cabbage or rape-butterfly (Pieris rapæ, Schrank). It appeared about twelve years ago in some northern seaports, and its range now extends from far north in Canada to the south of Georgia. It attacks every cruciferous garden vegetable, but in the flower garden curiously rejects plants of that family in favor of mignonette. Miss Murthly has noted a large amount of premature emergence from the chrysalis, and consequent death; indicating imperfect adjustment of the insect to the climate of its new habitat. In Europe the insect is mainly kept in check by numerous parasites. For several years in America none such came to the aid of the disheartened gardener, but some have now appeared, the most important being a small metallic green fly, which, though identical with the most destructive European parasite, is proved to be indigenous on both sides of the Atlantic. It lays its eggs in or upon the skin of the mature caterpillar, and from these come small maggots, which live on the fatty tissues of their victim but do not touch its vital organ until the chrysalis state is reached.—Nature.

Jay Gould's Time.

Several weeks ago, when Jay Gould was in Little Rock, he was visited in his special car by a strange-looking, oddly-dressed man. "Mr. Gould," said the visitor, "will you be generous enough to give me ten minutes of your time?" "Yes," said the millionaire, in a dry, last-year sort of voice. "Ten minutes, thank you, sir; write the check?" "What check?" said the millionaire, in a kind of last-month voice. "Perhaps I'd better explain. A noted mathematician has calculated your income to be $1 per second. With you, of course, time is money, face value. Now, you have given me ten minutes, amounting, you see, to $600. Have you got the money about you, or will you give me a check?" The millionaire looked at the man in silence. "I'll do the fair thing. Make it $500. Hanged if I don't be easy with you, make it $400—blame it, say $200." Mr. Gould looked long and inquiringly at the man, but didn't smile.—Arkansas Traveler.

Oil Scouts.

When an operator goes into an undeveloped field and puts down a test well he naturally desires to have the profit of his risk. It costs him something like $6,000 to put down that wildcat well, for which, in most cases, he gets no return, for the majority of wildcat wells produce nothing. If he finds a rich sand, however, and can keep it a secret for a while, he has a fortune in his hands. He can sell oil short, knowing that when it is known that a new field has been discovered the price will go down. His most direct opportunity, however, is to lease the land in the neighborhood of his well, to be sold again at an enormous profit as soon as it is known that it is productive territory. So he guards his secret with every appliance he can invent. His most dangerous enemies are the "scouts." They are paid to discover what he is trying to conceal.

Almost every prominent oil broker has a "scout" regularly employed to keep him posted on the latest doings at the front. Daring, cautious, patient, untiring, unscrupulous, and honest, the scout must add to the experience of a driller the subtle judgment of a broker and the keenness of an operator. In the shadows of the night he earns his salary lurking about in the neighborhood of a new well out of gunshot of the guards about the derrick; lying often in the snow or in the swamp for hours, with his nose and ears stretched above the shelter of some friendly log to catch the smell of gas or the gurgle of flowing oil; sneaking up to the tank house to get a peep in if possible; watching the motion of the walking beam and estimating the depth of the tools thereby; ready to bribe a driller or exchange shots with a guard at a moment's notice.

He sometimes spends weeks watching one particular well. He studies the habits of the men working on it, notes if any of them are likely to succumb to the temptation of his brandy flask, jots down the hours when each one takes his nap, marks which way their faces are mostly turned in their rounds, and, if he can not court their favor, devises some scheme to get inside their guard and at their secret. In the gray of the morning he rides away to the nearest telegraph office and communicates with his employer before the market opens. It is a mystery when he sleeps. Almost any time of the day he may be seen loitering about wherever there is a crowd, picking up acquaintance with the few drillers whom he does not already know.

The emoluments of the work are occasionally of a size to compensate for any amount of hardship. For instance "Si" Hughes, who got the Anchor Oil Company a pointer on 646, has been taken into the company with the office of superintendent and a clear tenth of their profits. His spring's work will net him not less than $150,000; but there is a well-defined path circling through the woods around 646, worn by the feet of those who worked as hard as he and got nothing but their salaries. How Hughes got his information is still a mystery. He is said to claim that he lay under the derrick for nineteen consecutive hours, but the prevailing impression is that he bought the secret from one of the guards.

In the course of an experience meeting the other evening with Capt. Peter Grace, one of the men who put down the 646 well in this district, he told me the true story of the mystery. Much has been written about it, more probably than was ever printed about an oil well before, but the Captain told me a few things which were new. This wonderful Cherry Grove district owes its develpment to the misfortunes of George H. Dimmick. He had been wrecked financially over in the Coal Creek region, and Capt. Grace set him to work out this way rather to give him a chance to recover than from any other motive. Land could be leased for a dollar an acre, and the experiment was not very costly.

"When the tools broke through the shell of the sand about ten o'clock on the morning of the 11th of March," said Capt. Grace, "we knew we had found wealth. The oil filled up a hundred feet before we could get the tools out. The pressure of gas was tremendous. We drove a tight-fitting wooden plug, three and a half feet long, to the bottom of the well, poured the hole full of oil, screwed in the casing-head, and set the tools, which weigh not less than a ton, on top of it. Even then when the well flowed it blew the casing-head off and sent the tools a-flying up the derrick.

"One trick we played to deceive the scouts I think has never got into print. I took a torpedo man into a room in the hotel at Warren one day, very mysteriously, but took good care to have a scout see me do it. Of course the scout immediately hid himself in the adjoining room. I told the shooter, with my voice trembling, that I had put my last dollar into the 646 venture, and had found no oil. I must get some appearance of grease in order to sell my lease and get out whole. I arranged with him to go out that night and torpedo the well. Well, we went out with a make-believe torpedo filled with water. The scouts were at our heels, of course, and watched every motion. We went to the well in the dead of night, and there went through the form of shooting the well so accurately that even the guards about the well were deceived. The next morning they complained that the smell of the dynamite had given them the headache. Sharp as they were, the scouts were all taken in, and did not find out the trick until weeks afterward."—Bradford (Pa.) Star.

INTERESTING ITEMS.

The Northern Radicals are trying to pooh hooh the Choctaw (Ala.) conspiracy as a manufactured canard of the Democrats.

Dr. Emanuel S. Drew, of New Orleans, died in that city last week. He was eminent in his profession, and served throughout the late war as surgeon of the Battalion Washington Artillery.

The war in Egypt has about ended. The victory by Sir Garnet Wolseley at Tel-el-Kebir last week resulted in the unconditional surrender of Arabi and his forces. The loss on the Egyptian side is reported at 2,000 men killed. The English loss was about 200.

Last year the people of the cotton states paid the northern and western states, in round numbers, $50,000,000, for corn, $72,000,000, for meats and some $25,000,000 for hay and provisions. The south will save the $75,000,000 for corn, hay and provisions this year if no more.

The Memphis Appeal believes with the close of the present year Mahone "will be the most odious and unpopular man in the United states. Hated by the party he has betrayed. and abandoned by those who used him because of his failure to Repuplicanize Virginia, even when backed by all the patronage of the Government."

During service in the cathedral at Ragusa some days ago the officiating priest, a member of the society of Jesuits, was stabbed to death by a girl whom he had betrayed. She inflicted five wounds. The congregation poured amid wild excitement into the street. and the girl was taken into custody.

Native merchants in Mexican cities complain that their Yankee competitors, who are becoming numerous, are disregarding the old custom of closing the stores betwen 11 o'clock and 3 every day in hot weather. The lazy Mexicans are compelled to lose either their siesta or considerable trade.

EVERGREEN, Ala. September 12.—An attempted insurrection of negroes was squashed at Burnt Corn. Alabama, by the arrest of four of the ringleaders. Resolutions where found in the possesion of the negroes, bearing their signature, in which they were to attack the whites next Sunday night. Considerable excitement here and at Burnt Corn.

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 13.—For several days past Gov. Colquitt has been thinking of appointing Mr. B. H. Hill, Jr., to fill the unexpired term of his father, the late Hon. Ben Hill, in the senate. To-night Mr Hill prepared a letter. to be sent to Gov. Colquitt, declining the prospective appointment. saying that the office is beyond his aspirations.

The Knight of the Red Gown.

We publish elsewhere an account of the appearance in Autauga county of a negro representing himself to be an agent of the government at Washington. Said negro states that he was sent out for the purpose of inciting the negroes to insurrection. Some weeks since another of his kind was arrested and jailed in Shelby county for exactly the same offence—making incendiary speeches to the negroes for the purpose of inciting them against the whites. The latter prophet or "priest," as he called himself, stated that the United States government army, navy and treasury—were ready to assist the blacks to kill all of the Democrats and would then divide the lands and other possessions among the Republican negroes. He also stated three hundred other "priests" had been sent out with himself to proclaim the "glorious tidings" to the dark hued hosts. As stated above, he was arrested and now lies in jail at Columbiana. The Autauga negro is also in durance vile. The latter, on being questioned, stated that he was sent out by the government at Washington, and instructed to report to prominent Republicans at Montgomery, who would assign him to his work.

Another of the gallant three hundred with four of his confederates, was arrested last week in Escambia county. Others have made their appearance in Monroe and Clark. What is the meaning of this? Will the defunct Radical party attempt again to wave the bloody-shirt in Alabama politics? Was said party responsible for the death of Jack Turner? These are some of the questions demanding the attention of the white people of Alabama, who should see to it that all such disturbers of the public peace be given a hearing, and then be placed in the hands of the law, that justice may be meted them.

Another Man in Uniform.

Montgomery Advertiser, 13th inst.]

Independence is a little hamlet in the interior of Autauga county, some ten miles from the river and some fifteen from a railroad. The beat of which Independence is the voting place contains a small majority of colored voters. The country round about is not fertile, being in large part of a piney woods character. The people are all small farmers, who earn their living in the good old way. They are more prosperous, because more industrious, than the people of some sections of the State; are peaceable, law-abiding and on the friendliest terms with the colored population.

In this secluded and peaceful community last week appeared one greater than John the Baptist, for he represented both the Lord and President Arthur. He was a negro, of course, black, short of stature, broad shouldered, decked out in a uniform of mixed pattern, stripes down his pants, a dancing cockade in his hat, and a gaudy rosette upon the lapel of his coat. During the week he preached to the negroes the way to spiritual salvation and sent the news through all the country round that on Saturday he would point the way to temporal plenty and renown. Accordingly on Saturday a large crowd of men, women and children gathered to feast upon the promised manna.

Among other things he told them he came direct from Washington, and that he bore credentials from President Arthur. He showed a package of papers which he declared to be his credentials and his authority. He told the women they must never more wash for the white people for less than $1.00 per day and "found." He had come to tell them that in a few weeks cotton would go up to 35 cents a pound and meat down to 4. He had come to tell them that President Arthur and Gen. Grant were going to send soldiers to the South, and that in a few months a negro would be as good as a white man. Social equality would be established, whites and negroes would eat and sleep together and intermarry. On the 15th of September, six feet of dirt would be presented free to every negro who hadn't, by that date, denied any intention of voting the Democratic ticket.

Lastly, he asserted that the whites in some portions of the State had arrested Mr. Arthur's agents, but he defied them to interfere with him. In conclusion, he called upon all those present who would stand by him in his resistance to the whites to rise to their feet. It is needless to say the whole caboodle rose, men, women and children. On Sunday a warrant of arrest was issued, and Monroe White, as he called himself, is doubtless by this time marching to the jingle of a pair of hand cuffs.

The question is, is the negro a crank, acting on his own motion, or is he acting on inspiration from some high source? He has money, and claims to have gotten it in Washington city. He exhibits it to the negroes and spends it freely. He may be the same negro who was in Butler county a few months since, and in Conecuh and Covington a few weeks ago. But he cannot be the "red man" of Shelby, for the latter is in jail. Others preaching the same doctrines are now in Monroe and Clarke. If these negroes are cranks, there must be something in the atmosphere favorable to the development of crankiness. So many cranks at one time and all afflicted in precisely the same way, is just the least bit singular.

The following letter in reference to the negro of whom an account is given above, was received after the article was written. Verily the plot thickens. He was undoubtedly the same negro who appeared in Butler some months ago:

MULBERRY, AUTAUGA CO.,
September 11, 1882.

Editor of Advertiser: The incendiary negro Monroe White is under arrest. He makes a full confession and says that [illegible] held a meeting soon after the late election in Montgomery, and that Ben Turner, George Turner, J. T. Rapier, Jerry Haralson, Bones Miller, Gus Johnson and John Foster sent him out to get up disturbances before the next election and furnished the money, of which he seems to have plenty. He says that they told him that Mr Conkling was backing them; that he knows he was doing wrong, and pleads guilty to making incendiary speeches and conspiring to disturb the public peace.
T. D. C.

LATER—The incendiary instrument says he is sometimes called John White. Bond fixed at $500 and committed to jail, which I hope he will reach safely.

We were in error in stating that Rev. H. R. McCoy assisted in the camp meeting. It should have been written Rev. W. C. McCoy. We also failed to note the presence of Revs. Rush and Roy, of Prattville, and of Rev. Mr. McDaniel, of Jemison, all of whom did good work during the meeting.

Our Congressman writes us that nothing can be done in the way of establishing post offices on the new mail route between Maplesville and Columbiana, until the next session of Congress. Among the Wildwoods.

ED. VIEW:—It was a gay and merry crowd who selected last Friday evening to take a starlight jaunt among the wildwoods surrounding Blasingame's mill. As I saw neither the "boss man" nor his Satan along, I will give you a few dots of the enjoyable occasion.

The party went out on the tram road. It had been proposed to have a moonlight picnic, but the silvery god of the night was no where to be seen, and had it not been for a few shimmering stars, the night would have been as dark as Uncle Remus himself. It seems that nearly everybody was there who could be, and I will enumerate some of the interesting characters who were present. First, I saw Mr. Impertinence trying to persuade Miss Softheart that she was the daisest darling in all the world. He succeeded. Next Mr. Softhead could be seen beating around the bushes and occasionally casting "side-long looks of love" upon Miss Bashfulness. Mr. Laziness was asked by Miss Worried-to-death to get a small cane which she had thrown some ten paces away. He started out to obey the request, in hopes of obtaining favor, perhaps. He had gone just half the distance when he came up or down into a magnificent mud-hole. Miss Worried-to-death seeing his plight innocently remarked that she intended telling him of that hole. And he, poor fellow, to show his good humor replied: "No matter, I have found it now." Mr. Heavyheart and Mr. Silverspoons staid at home, at least they did not make their appearance. Mr. Love was in all his g'ory and ever and anon would obtain one of those three-for-a-dime smiles from Miss Fickleness, who would, with an I've-caught-him-at-last air, wink a double wink at her "pard," Miss Flirt.

The party returned at a late hour none the worse for wear. Everything went as "merry as a marriage bell." It was an occasion to be long remembered by all who were there, and all who were not there will die sadder and worse.

The California highwaymen have a new dodge, calculated to make campmeetings dangerous. One of them recently visited a camp meeting at Wheatland at which the Rev. Mr. Strobell was preaching. He desired the pastor to pray for him, which he very kindly undertook to do. Then the stranger, after professing conversion, desired Mr. Strobell to accompany him to a secluded part of the camp, where he claimed he had a brother and sister about whose salvation he was anxious. Again the preacher complied with his request, but when they had reached the edge of the camp the stranger drew a revolver and ordered the preacher to throw up his hands. He then proceeded to relieve the divine of his watch and purse, and went on his way rejoicing. It is needless to say that preacher has less confidence in religious professions than formerly.

Dr. Cullis, who has become noted through his faith-cure camp meeting, at Old Orchard, where miracles are asserted to have been wrought in answer to his prayers, is a Boston physician in extensive practice. He has collected about $150,000 to support the Faith Cure Home, and his integrity is so unquestioned that all the money expended in eleven different charity institutions is given into his hands by the contributors. He for many years habitually prayed in behalf of patients whom medicine did not cure, and he has great faith.

Cheap Books.

Books in America are cheap; no absolute rule of comparison can be laid down, but, speaking broadly, they may be said to be sold for a fifth of their English price, and in some cases much less. It is idle to think the American people will ever forego this advantage in deference to arguments about international copyright, and the strong language which some English writers have used on the subject is beside the mark. Literary property, like every other property, is the creation of law, and there is no real point, though there may be a good deal of violence, in calling an American publisher a "thief" and "robber" for taking what is not recognized as property in the country in which he lives. There are good reasons for a better international understanding on this question—in other words, for a treaty—but the reasons are of a practical character, and it is unprofitable to talk of "rights" which, on one side at least, are not recognized.

Why are books costly in this country? The American people have cheap books, and we know the reason. They greatly appreciate cheap books, and there is no need to say why. To whatever extent they may hereafter recognize the claim of English authors, they will never exchange cheap books for dear books. Why is it that in England we await the converse transition—the transition from dear books to cheap books? In the United States people buy books—here they borrow them. Our publishers publish for the most part for circulating libraries—individual buyers are little thought of. The writings of the great English classics may be bought at moderate, not to say low prices—a complete Shakspeare may be had for a shilling. But while eminent authors of a bygone generation are readily accessible to the multitude, modern authors are not. Books that have had a great run—popular books, more or less solid—are after a time republished in cheaper forms, though frequently the concession made in this respect can matter little to the great mass of the public. A "cheap edition" of a fifteen-shilling book is not irresistible, though published at seven and sixpense; to the majority of people it is still an expensive luxury. Of course there are such people that buy such books, both in their original and cheap forms; many of them are bought for the same reasons as silver thimbles and card-cases—i. e., as "appropriate presents." Students and professional men also buy books; they are the tools of their trade, bought often after much hesitation and with a painful conviction that they are "very dear." The literary personage known as the "general reader" is not a book-buyer except under strong temptation. He lingers, with more promising customers, around the bookstalls, and peeps into booksellers' windows, but he is content to draw the bulk of his mental nourishment from lending libraries, and, it may be, lending friends. Among the artisan and laboring classes it may be feared that book-buying is "more honored in the breach than the observance." There are mechanics who buy technical books bearing on their trades, wishing all the while that they cost less, or that they could buy more freely. We touch here an aspect of the subject that has an important bearing upon industrial progress; in the United States technical books are cheap, and find many possessors among the wage-earning classes.

Books are dear in England because dear books are with us a national tradition. We move slowly out of old ways because new ways are more troublesome, and because there are many sound proverbs about a bird in the hand, and letting well alone. The English publishing trade is organized on certain lines; it has its own rut, and a natural indisposition to get out of it. But there is no obvious reason why English books—new books or books comparatively new—should be dear. The cheapness of books in America is due to a special cause; but French books are not dear, while the rights of French authors are respected quite as much as in this country. In France the book of the day may be had for three or four francs, and in England we want books of the day at the same price. It is an obvious remark that publishers know their own business, and that if cheap books would pay as well as dear ones they would be forthcoming. It may be admitted that all books can not be sold cheap—that there are works for which the demand would in any circumstances be small, and which must therefore be sold at comparatively high prices. But publishers appear to be finding out that cheap books do pay. During the last twelve months a considerable number of cheap modern books have been placed in the market, and the sale of them has been enormous. We refer to the sixpenny reprints, of which Mrs. Brassey's "Voyage of the Sunbeam" may be taken to be the best-known representative. These reprints are produced in the same style as the similar reprints in America, and there is no apparent reason why the system should not find here a much larger development. The book-selling trade is, we believe, divided in opinion as to the tendency of these reprints, some believing them to spoil the sale of the more expensive editions, and others believing them to yield, on the whole, better profits. This is not a question with which the public need concern themselves. What is wanted is cheap and good books, and abundant room for choice. In no other way will the sale of literary garbage be diminished. The quantity of detestable matter—periodical or otherwise—in the literary market is simply appalling, and it requires to be met and fought on its own ground.—London Echo.

—At Innisville, Canada, eightee years ago, David Ennis married a young lady, and soon after determined to seek his fortune in Australia. He left his wife behind. Eighteen years passed and no tidings came from the absent husband till recently, when the news of his arrival at Perth was followed by his return to Innisville. A young man, seventeen years of age, his son, drove out to meet him and conveyed him home. Throughout the long period of eighteen years the wife remained true to her husband.

Women deceived by men want to marry them; it is a kind of revenge as good as any other.—Beauvenoir.

Melons in the New York Market.

The very first melons to strike the market come from Florida and they readily bring $1 each. Next the products begin to come from Georgia, and by this time the pickings in Florida have largely increased. Next melons are shipped from Charleston, S. C., and as the season advances they begin to be brought from Moorhead City, N. C., by way of Point Lookout from Powell's Point, N. C., through the canal and sound, and making the sea at Cape Hatteras. The fruit from Norfolk is brought by the Old Dominion steamships. Up and down the coast the water melons may be seen in transit piled high on the decks of the trim little oyster boats. These boats in the winter season are engaged in carrying the luscious bivalves; then, after a few trips carrying up Irish potatoes from Southern ports, the watermelon season opens and keeps them busy until the sweet potatoes demand a few trips. Up to thirty schooner loads in a single day have arrived at this port, but somehow all the fruit finds a market, though occasionally a dealer insisting on a certain price finds himself with a lot of soft fruit on his hands, and is compelled to throw the stuff overboard. The fruit coming by the sailing vessels is the more carefully handled, and there is less loss, though now and then a sudden extra lurch may send a score or two from the deck load bobbing overboard. At the steamer docks there may often be seen a heap of several hundred broken melons, about which hover a crowd of street boys and 'longshoremen, each greedily breaking out chunks of the red, succulent meat within and eating it with great relish and little ceremony.

The melon really becomes a popular fruit when the Jersey crop comes in. This sweeps all the Southern prices away and they sell down at wholesale as low as ten dollars per hundred, and for twenty-five cents the groceryman can well afford to furnish a fine, big fruit, one which when picked up and pressed will respond with that peculiar crackle from the interior by which an epicure in melons selects his fruit. The three most marketable varieties of the melons are the Spanish, Jersey sweets and stripes. It is a common trick with the guileless countrymen who grow the melons to cross breed them with pumpkins, and while the result is an unusually large and externally handsome melon the heart is fibrous, after the manner of a pumpkin. The cross is made by dropping a pumpkin seed in every tenth hill, and the pollen carried from the pumpkin flowers to the melon blossoms produces the desired result. Few of these mongrel melons have made their appearance in market this year, and they have been rejected, teaching growers that city patrons want size, but not at a sacrifice of quality.

Watermelons are not "tinned"—that is, they are not put down in hermetically sealed cans for winter use. They cannot be successfully desiccated either. They must be eaten from the rind, the cooler the better, and out of the total weight of fruit handled but little goes into ordinary consumption. About that watermelon rind there is somewhat of a mystery. A little is used for throwing promiscuously about the sidewalk to imperil the lives and limbs of pedestrians, and for this purpose it is capitally successful. But not a small share of it is eaten, although it is as indigestible a substance as can be put into the stomach. Some cut it up and palm it off as "citron" in sweet preserves. It is chopped up, soaked in mustard and vinegar, mixed with other odds and ends of green vegetables, and appears in cheap restaurants as "chow chow." Again it is cut into proper forms, boiled in sirup, seasoned and dried, and is sold at low prices as "candied lemon." For this last-named deception very large quantities of the smooth-coated cantaloupe is also employed. One chemist in Georgia has been experimenting, and estimates that the 34,500 pounds of melon which could be grown on an acre of good land would produce seven per cent. of saccharine matter, and this 2,415 pounds of sugar at ten cents per pound would represent a gross acreage value of a crop of melons of $241.50. No factories for melon sugar have, however, as yet been established.

The chances are that with the warm dry weather prevalent over the country the melon crop will be a very large and excellent one. The "nigger-heads," as the dark, globular shaped ones are called, are by some thought the best, but much more depends upon the particular soil and the state of the fruit when picked than upon the variety. There is to be an effort made to export some specimens this year, one firm on Vesey pier having an order to ship when the fruit comes in a satisfactory state. These are for Americans traveling abroad who wish to enjoy this distinctively American production though thousands of miles from home. Packed carefully and kept cool, there will be little difficulty in getting the fruit in presentable condition to any European seaport ready to fill its role of pain-producer with the unaccustomed European stomach.

Already "melon cuts" are announced in many directions. The decimated fruit will stand in tempting ridges, its red, cool flesh dotted with the black seeds. To demolish a dozen of these slices was an ordinary feat to many a one. After the wonderful Dr. Tanner showed that there was some merit in the humble watermelon there was a great boom in the fruit. Many who had been before content with a single nibble now ate slice after slice, and found after all that they were getting little more than water.—N. Y. Herald.

—"The fact is," said the seedy tramp, "I have read so much about the troubles in the labor market that I am heartily sick of the whole business, and I made up my mind long ago that I would never have anything to do with labor. As I am a man who never forsakes his principles, I can not work; but if you have a nice rare steak and cup of hot coffee about the premises, I'll devote a few moments to their demolition."

Wanted a Job.

Yesterday a man came into the Boomerang office with the air of a man who is tired of this earth and wants to wing his way to a land of forgetfulness and plunge into the lethian depths of oblivion. After he had taken a seat on the tete-a-tete and hung his hat on the escritoire, he said:

"I'm a newspaper man myself. Didn't know but you might want a good man on the staff, somebody to write up the sad features of life and furnish the tearful wail, as it were. Life is full of woe, and in my estimation every paper should have a woe editor. I am well fitted for that position, as you will see if I may be allowed to go on and detail my own experience to you.

"I went down into Kansas and started a paper in a small town on the Sante Fe Road, with the assurance that I would meet with the cordial aid and sympathy of the people there. I didn't expect to do a big business, but I just wanted to run a little modest sheet. The first week my paper didn't get there, and I had to print that issue on some paper bags that I got from our leading grocer. This was an advantage, because his ad. was already printed on the first page and it saved the wear and tear of display type. Still the paper looked meager and did not attract the attention that I had hoped for it. It did not influence the Administration nor boom up the town as I had anticipated.

"The next week I wrote up a little social party and gave the name of a young man who was drunk and frolicsome and shot out all the lights. He also shot an old man who was "calling off" the dance.

"I thought the press ought to be fearless and outspoken if the occasion required, and I wrote it up carefully and, as I thought, fairly, but the young man came around the next day and convinced me that I was wrong. I was writing a scathing article on agnosticism when he came in and knocked me under the job-press with a chair. I didn't know him at all and thought it was rather eccentric for a total stranger, so when I got up again I told him so. Then he jammed me into the wood-box and poured a keg of ink and a can of coal oil on me before I could have any understanding with him.

"Then he went away.

"That evening he came with some friends and bought the good-will of the establishment, and the whole office and subscription list of me. He had the advantage of me, and bought it low. I felt that I was making a sacrifice, but I was afraid I might not have another opportunity to sell, so I sold. The price, of course, was nominal, but the inducements held out were not to be ignored.

"Since then I have started three papers, and had three large and hotly-contested fights. My collar-bone has been broken in two places, and my doctor's bills have always been bigger than the other expenses of the office. The dentist has been pulling teeth out of my palate ever since I entered into the newspaper business. As soon as I got so I could see with both eyes one of them has been closed up on me, and my nose has at different times pointed around all over my face.

"What I want now is a chance to work on some paper in cog., as I might say, and where I will be by myself. I can take most any current event and tinge it with sadness. I can give an air of hopeless melancholy to the occurrences of everyday life that will make your paper known all over the world. I will admit that this is an innovation in journalism, perhaps, but it will take, I think, and I know that if I can succeed in imbuing into my work that settled air of gloom that I feel, your paper will win for itself in a short time the name of being the most ghastly record of disappointment and grief-stricken, horror-soaked remorse in the known world."

The manager sobbed a few times and then said, while his voice was choked with emotion, that the opaque gloom department was ably filled at present; and the stranger went out into the cold, hard, unsympathizing outer world, taking with him his leaden burden of woe and a silk umbrella that stood in the hall.—Nye's Boomerang.

Japanese Diet.

Japan furnishes an example that tells largely in favor of a vegetarian diet. That the Japanese are a people of muscle and great physical endurance is apparent on every hand. The specimens of muscular development shown in the build and structure of the working classes are evidences of great strength and hardiness. The diet of these men is entirely of vegetables and fish, and they are very economical feeders at that. The quantity of food they require, or, at least, the quantity that they eat, is astonishingly small when compared with the food devoured by the meat-eaters from the Western World. The amount of manual labor they perform is prodigious. The coolie who does the work for which oxen and horses are utilized elsewhere is about as strong and can accomplish about as much heavy work as the beasts of burden they take the place of. They are possessed of immense power of limb, being able to pull loads that would be considered as much as any ordinary draught animal could draw. It is wonderful to see them walking away with the heavy loads they easily move; and as carriers of burdens upon the shoulder they are capable of startling achievements. Seemingly their frames are as tough as steel, not susceptible of cold or intense heat—going thinly clad in freezing weather, and not shrinking from the sun in its most oppressive seasons.—Yokohama Cor. San Francisco Chronicle.

—A colored man, Mr. J. R. Ballard, was recently ordained in St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Fla., which is called the most aristocratic church in the State, by Bishop Young, in the presence of a distinguished audience. Hen-Roosts.

Seeing a farmer near me building a new hen-house the other day, I took occasion to give him a new idea. He was putting in his roosts in the old-fashioned way, one being above the other at an angle of about forty-five degrees. In this way the fowls are led to attempt to get upon the highest roost; and as it gets full the weaker ones are crowded off and fall to the ground, and begin again to climb up, only to repeat the same performance, until it gets so dark that they stop climbing, resting content upon the lower roosts. In the morning the fowls will not go down as they went up, from one roost to another, but fly from the roosts to the ground. In this way and by falling from the roosts to the ground at night, heavy fowls especially, when very fat or very full of eggs, are often crippled in the legs, or otherwise injured. Many likely hens I have seen completely spoiled in this way. I told him that I should build the roosts of the same height, and no more than two and a half feet from the floor, putting them about fifteen inches apart. Before I left I had the satisfaction of seeing him commence to undo the work he had done, and build the roosts as I suggested, and of hearing an old farmer who was present declare his intention of taking out his roosts, which are of the "ladder style," and putting in new ones level and lower. I think they will save hens enough before spring by doing so to more than pay for the labor it will take.—American Stockman.

Definitions

It is curious, the love some people have of definitions. They are the delight of persons who think, but whose thinking has not gone a great way. It is not hard to understand why definitions are in such favor. To begin with, they save a good deal of trouble; it is pleasant to know that we have the result of much patient thought and careful investigation put up for our use in a neat, compact little bundle, easily portable without fatigue. Definitions are compressions of large truth into small compass, and it is plain that they may be very useful things; but the difficulty with them is that they are not always trustworthy, and it is just this essential point about them which the definition-lover is incompetent to decide. He wants a sure rule of judgment in a certain matter, because he himself does not understand it well enough to do without a definition, or to make one for himself. Oddly enough, he is often ignorant of what a definition is; he needs, first of all, to have the meaning of that word defined for him.—Atlantic Monthly.

WILLIAM BROWN, OF OREGON.

They called him Bill, the hired man,
But she, her name was Mary Jane,
The squire's daughter; and to reign
The belle from Ber-she-be to Dan,
Her little game. How lovers rush
Got mittens at the spelling-school!
How many a mute, inglorious fool
Wrote rhymes and sighed and dyed—mustache!

The hired man had loved her long,
Had loved her best and first and last,
Her very garments as she passed
For him had symphony and song.
So when one day with brow afrown
She called him "Bill," he raised his head,
He caught her eye and, faltering said:
"I love you; and my name is Brown."

She fairly waltzed with rage; she wept;
You would have thought the house on fire.
She told her sire, the portly squire,
Then smelt her smelling salts and slept.
Poor William did what could be done;
He swung a pistol on each hip,
He gathered up a great ox whip,
And drove toward the setting sun.

He crossed the great back bone of earth,
He saw the snowy mountains rolled
Like mighty billows; saw the gold
Of awful sunsets; saw the birth
Of sudden dawn upon the plain,
And every night would William Brown
Eat pork and beans, and then lie down
And dream sweet dreams of gentle Jane.

Her lovers passed. Wolves hunt in packs,
They sought for bigger game; somehow
They seemed to see above her brow
The forky sign of turkey tracks.
The teter-board of life goes up,
The teter-board of life goes down,
The sweetest face must learn to frown,
The biggest dog has been a pup.

O, maidens! pluck not at the air;
The sweetest flowers I have found
Grow rather close unto the ground,
And highest places are most bare.
Why you had better win the grace
Of one poor cussed Af-ri-can,
Than win the eyes of every man
In love alone with his own face.

At last she nursed a new desire,
She sighed, she wept for William Brown.
She watched the splendid sun go down
Like some great sailing ship on fire.
Then rose and checked her trunk right on;
And in the cars she lunched and lunched,
And had her ticket punched and punched,
Until she came to Oregon.

She reached the limit of the lines,
She wore blue specks upon her nose,
Wore rather short and manly clothes,
And so set out to reach the mines.
Her right hand held a Testament,
Her pocket held a parasol,
And thus equipped right on she went,
Went water-proof and water-fall.

She met a miner gazing down,
Slow stirring something with a spoon;
"O tell me true and tell me soon,
What has become of William Brown?"
He looked askance beneath her specs,
Then stirred his cocktail round and round,
Then raised his head and sighed profound,
And said: "He's handed in his checks."

Then care fed on her damaged cheek,
And she grew faint, did gallus Jane,
And smelt her smelling salts in vain.
She wandered, weary, worn and weak.
At last upon a hill alone
She came, and there she sat her down:
For on that hill there stood a stone,
And, lo! that stone read: "William Brown."

"O, William Brown! O, William Brown!
And here you rest at last," she said,
"With this lone stone above your head,
And forty miles from any town!
I will plant cypress trees, I will,
And I will build a fence around,
And I will fertilize the ground
With tears enough to turn a mill."

She went and got a hired man,
She brought him forty miles from town,
And in the tall grass squatted down
And bade him build as she should plan.
But savage cow-boys with their bands
They saw, and hurriedly they ran
And told a bearded cattle man
Somebody builded on his lands.

He took his rifle from the rack,
He girt himself in battle pelt,
He stuck two pistols in his belt,
And, mounting on his horse's back,
He plunged ahead. But when they showed
A woman fair, about his eyes
He pulled his hat, and he likewise
Pulled at his beard and chewed and chewed.

At last he gat him down and spake:
"O, lady dear, what do you here?"
"I build a tomb unto my dear,
I plant sweet flowers for his sake."
The bearded man threw his two hands
Above his head, then brought them down
And cried: "Oh, I am William Brown,
And this the corner-stone of my lands!"

Her specs fell off, her head fell back,
Just like some lifted tea-pot lid;
She screamed, this ancient maiden did,
And fainting, spilt herself, in fact,
Right in the beard of William Brown;
Then even the Indians were amazed,
They thought this gentle maiden crazed,
And circling round they squatted down.

But William was a gentle man:
He bade two Indians call the priest,
He bade two more prepare a feast,
Then led her, blushing, by the hand,
Like some sweet maiden in sweet May.
He was so good, he was so true,
He did not know what else to do,
But led her round and round all day.

At last the priest, on spotted mare,
Who galloped forty miles or more,
He found them in the grasses sore,
And married them right then and there.
Then all the cow-boys they came down
And feasted as the night advanced,
And all the diggers drank and danced,
And cried: "Big Injin, William Brown!"

A CHINESE CHILDREN'S BOOK.

Every nation appears to have a favorite virtue, which it endeavors to impress upon the minds of its children. Turn over some French books for children, and you will observe that the moral of most of the stories is: Be gentle and polite; be considerate and agreeable; seize every opportunity to be obliging.

The type of English books of this class is Robinson Crusoe, which inculcates courage, fortitude and self-dependence, the virtues which conquer the world.

What is the favorite virtue of the United States? If I should judge from the pieces I hear oftenest declaimed in our schools, I should say it was love of country, a preference which displayed itself in a remarkable manner during the late war.

In China, for twenty centuries past, the great object of moral teaching has been to inculcate reverence for ancestors, devotion to parents and kindness to brothers and sisters. The popular stories of China mostly turn upon family affection. If an orator should wish to move a Chinese audience to tears, he could not do better than relate some affecting instance of filial piety.

The most popular book for Chinese children is a collection of one hundred and two stories, each illustrated by a picture, nearly all of which are narratives of extraordinary devotion to parents or near relatives. So much valued is this work by the amiable people of China that many editions are published by men of wealth for free distribution. By applying at the office of publication any one may have a copy for nothing.

An English missionary, Mr. A. E. Moule, a gentleman capable of doing justice to the virtues of a heathen people, has translated a number of these tales into our language, and thus enabled us to know precisely what the moral lesson is which parents and teachers in China most assiduously teach. Many of these stories are obviously incredible, but the moral of them all is substantially the same.

One story is this: There was a very naughty boy named Han, whom his mother used very often to whip with a rattan, but without making him shed a tear. But one day, after being flogged, he cried; whereupon his mother asked him why he did so.

"Oh, mother," he answered, "you used to hurt me when you flogged me, but now I weep because you are not strong enough to hurt me."

The Chinese author who relates this remarkable tale, adds, by way of comment, that "it makes one weep even to read it."

Some of the stories are more like truth. There was once a little boy who bore a name which, being translated into English, would be Laudable Highland. When he was six years of age a gentleman named Ze gave him two oranges, which, instead of eating, he put into his bosom, and bowed his thanks. As he bowed, the oranges fell out, and rattled along the ground. Ze exclaimed:

"Here's a pretty young visitor, to hide his oranges and carry them off without eating them! What does this mean?"

Then little Laudable knelt down and said:

"My mother is particularly fond of oranges, and I wish to keep them for her."

Ze was surprised, and let him go home without reproof.

Then there is a story of a man named Lee, whose mother was always very much frightened in a thunder storm. At last, she died and was buried in a wood; but, as often as a thunderstorm threatened, Lee ran to his mother's tomb, and, kneeling down, cried out with tears:

"Lee is near you—don't be afraid, mother."

There is a curious story of a boy of eight named Woo Mang, which means Brave and Talkative. He was wonderfully dutiful to his parents, who were so poor that they could not afford mosquito nettings for their bed. So Woo, early in the evening, used to get into his parents' bed, and let the mosquitoes bite him without disturbance for an hour or two, and then, when they were filled with his blood, and could bite no more, he would get out, and call to his parents to go to bed and sleep in peace.

Another story calls to mind that of the Greek mother who told her son, as he was going to battle, to return to her with his shield or upon it. A father and two sons, after noble conduct in battle, fell by the hand of the enemy, the sons having followed their father into the thick of the fight. When the bodies were brought home, the bereaved mother laid her hand gently upon them and said:

"The father was a loyal officer, and the boys were dutiful sons. Come, come, this is no time for lamentation."

Another story is of a man whose mother had lost her eyesight. For thirty years he took care of her, leading her out on pleasant days into the garden, where he would laugh and sing so gayly that his mother forgot her sad condition. When, at length, she died, her son almost wasted away from sorrow, and on recovering his health bestowed all his tenderness upon his brothers and sisters, his nephews and nieces. He used to say to himself:

"This is the only way in which I can get some comfort, in letting my love go forth to those who are left."

There is a similar story of a great officer, named Yang, who in the spring time used to carry his aged mother on his back up and down the flowery walks of the garden, and, after placing her in a shady seat, frisk and gambol about for her amusement. The old lady live to the age of one hundred and four.

There was another great officer whose younger brother, named Perverse, was terrible addicted to drink, and, one day, in a drunken fit shot his brother's only ox. When the officer came home, his wife met him, and said:

"Perverse has shot your ox."

He was not at all disturbed by this intelligence, and asked for no information, but simply said:

"Well, let the ox be cut up for food."

Having said this, he sat calmly down to read, when his wife again cried:

"Perverse has shot the ox; surely this is no light matter."

"I am aware of it," said her husband, and kept on reading his book without even changing color. Such was his unwillingness to be moved by a brother's misconduct.

Brotherly love, in fact, is regarded by the Chinese as only less important than filial duty.

There is a story of a Mandarin, named Soo, before whom some brothers brought a suit about the division of a tract of land. After much litigation, continued at intervals for ten years, the Mandarin at last called the brothers before him, and addressed them thus:

"It is difficult to get a brother; it is easy enough to get land. Suppose you gain your fields and lose your brother, how will you feel then?"

Upon this the Mandarin wept, and not one of the bystanders could keep back his tears. Instantly the brothers, perceiving their error, bowed low to the magistrate, asked his forgiveness, and, after ten years of separation, took up their abode together in the family homestead.

The work is filled with such tales as these. Family duty appears to be the religion of the Chinese people. If we may judge from the narratives of M. Huc and other missionaries, both Protestant and Catholic, Chinese families live together in peace and harmony. Many of their popular sayings and maxims express a very elevated kind of moral feeling. Take these as specimens:

"You may be uncivil to a great man; but mind that you are respectful to a small man."

"To go on a pilgrimage to offer incense in a distant temple is not so good as showing kindness near home."

Leigh Smith's Story of His Arctic Experiences.

A recent London dispatch says:

The steamer Hope, commanded by Sir Allen Young, C. B., which left here in June last in search of the crew of the Eira, has arrived at Peterhead with the entire crew of that vessel. The Hope picked them up in Matolshkin Straits, Nova Zembla, the 3d of August, they having lost their ship off Franz Josef Land and journeyed in boats to the straits, through the ice. Leigh Smith, commander of the Eira expedition, gives the following account of its experience:

"On July 13, 1881, we steamed through pack-ice, and ten days later sighted Franz Josef Land. We proceeded toward Cape Ludlow, which was close to the pack to the northward. August 2 we went up Nightingale Sound and thence to Eira Harbor, and erected a store-house. On the 16th we started east to look for the Jeannette, but were unable to pass Berent Hook. On August 21 the Eira got nipped between a land-floe and pack-ice a mile east of Cape Flora, and sank before we were able to save many of the stores. We built a hut on Cape Flora of turf and stones, and covered it with sails. We wintered there, and during the whole time no signs of scurvy appeared. Twenty-nine walrus and thirty-six bears were killed, and eaten. We left Cape Flora June 21, 1882, in four boats, sailed eighty miles without seing any ice, and reached Nova Zembla August 2. When the Eira was nipped the leak gained so rapidly that in two hours after it had been discovered it was necessary to abandon the ship. Hardly had the last man left the vessel when the ice eased and the Eira rapidly sank. A tent was first erected on the ice, and the house was subsequently built."

All the boats of the Eira were saved. Most of the men saved some clothes and bedding. For sixteen nights the crew slept in a tent, from which they were at times almost floated out by rain.

Do Your Own Repairing.

We think that almost every farmer will agree with us that every farm should have its own workshop, and every cultivator of the land should understand how to use it. He may not do so when he first enters upon farming on coming of age; but after a year or two of what we should call apprenticeship, when he finds that to "know how to do things" is absolutely indispensable, he will rapidly learn to attend to most of his own repairing of the ordinary implements and machines upon his premises, instead of incurring delay, expense and uncertainty by depending upon professionals at a distance. Rather than to be without a workshop and the necessary tools, one should be erected expressly for the purpose, in a convenient spot, and daily warmed in winter so as to be ready at all times for use, in which many odd jobs can be done also not immediately connected with the farm.

All ordinary wooden repairing ought to be done by the farmer and his hands during rainy days and in winter, when there is plenty of time on hand for that purpose. Every part of a wheelbarrow, except the wheel, ought to be made on the premises; new forks and handles of iron rakes, repairing even some portions of the farm machinery, building of garden and yard fences, repairing roofs, building of corn-cribs, hog-pens, wagon and cart shelvings, making of the frames of hot-beds, and all the many jobs requiring to be done about a well conducted place too numerous to mention. A person becomes very handy in the use of good tools after a short experience, and saves many a dollar, without consuming any time necessary for the usual demands of the farm.

Dog Fat.

The attention of a reporter of the World was attracted yesterday afternoon while at the dog-pound by two boys who were carefully skinning and dressing a dog that had just been drowned according to law for vagrancy.

"What are you doing that for?" was asked.

"For consumption," replied one of the boys. "For a two-dollar bill," said the other.

It was finally explained that many residents of the east side of the city firmly believe that dog fat is an infallible cure for consumption.

"The boys told you the truth," said Dr. Ennever, the veterinary stationed at the pound, who was next questioned. "A great many people believe that dog fat, and even the flesh of dog, is a sure cure for consumption, and on an average one dog a week is taken from here and reduced to medicine."

"Who comes after them?"

"Generally women, either Germans or Jews. They come up here, and, after carefully examining all the dogs, select one that seems to be healthy and fat. They then point out their selection to an attendant, who ties a string round its neck or marks the animal in some way so as to identify it. The woman is told on what day that particular beast will be drowned; she returns at the time specified, gets the body, and turns it over to some of the hoodlums round here, who for a dollar or two skin it and take off the fat. If she wishes the carcass they dress it for her just as a butcher would a lamb or calf. No, yellow dogs have no value in this way; a black dog is always chosen in preference to any other color, if he is fat and healthy."

"How do they take the medicine, as I suppose they call it?"

"In different ways. Some reduce it to oil and take it as a liquid by the spoonful; others fry it out and then after it gets cold spread it on bread as you would butter and eat it so."

"Do they eat the meat, too?"
